Consensus of expert thinkers here is that a decision to invade the Netherlands and Belgium now would be significant indication of military desperation in the Reich. For weather conditions are most unfavorable for an offensive. A thaw just beginning in the Netherlands has weakened the ice which would aid defenders against any mechanized invasion. The advantage of a surprise attack is now lost to the Germans since the Netherlands-Belgian forces are now more than ever on guard.

In Belgium, particularly extensive action has been taken. Phase D of Belgian mobilization has been put into effect—the next to the last before general mobilization. Additional troops were rushed to frontiers, and reliable reports state certain frontier districts are being evacuated by the civilian population. Some 500 evacuees already were reported to have reached Brussels in keeping with a standing Government promise to move them if the situation became tense.

[Phases A, B, and C were taken last September. Only Phase E remained to be carried out to make Belgium completely mobilized. Phase D is primarily concerned with technicians, while Phase E would call up men to fill gaps in units already prepared in skeleton form. Under Phase D the country is considered on a war footing and ready to face active fighting.]

NETHERLANDS CALM

The Belgian mobilization brings the Nation's armed strength up to about 600,000 men. The Netherlands' cancellation of leaves added 50,000 men to the mobilized forces, which now are believed to total 400,000.

The calm tone that has accompanied the mobilization is apparent from both the Belgian and The Netherlands' official statements. The communique in which The Netherlands Government annnounced the decision of Premier Dirk Jan de Geer's Cabinet said:

"In view of certain less favorable symptoms in the international situation the Government has, in order to be fully prepared for all happenings, decided not to give periodic leaves until further notice."

In Belgium the semi-official Belga News Agency, however, issued a note in Brussels denying what it called "alarmist stories" being "spread in Belgium and abroad" and said additional mobilization was proof only of the vigilance of the Government. "No threat has been hidden from the Belgian public," the note said, "and the independence of sources of information and the liberty of the press should inspire calm . . . Belgium remains calm, but the Army is on its toes."

SHARPENING OF SITUATION

In The Netherlands, soldiers' leave was stopped after an emergency meeting of the Cabinet, and the official statement explained measures were taken "as a result of the sharpening of the international situation."

Direct causes of these new defense measures are reported to be fresh German troop concentrations, said to amount to nearly a million men, close to the Belgian-Netherlands frontiers.

Furthermore, Belgian authorities have been disquieted by unusually frequent flights of German planes over Belgian territory. Papers, photographs, and documents, found in one of these German planes forced down on Belgian territory, are said to have contained information which is partly responsible for the present anxiety.

This apprehension has also been increased by German protests that a Netherlands plane recently flew over Germany. The Hague denies this as completely untrue.

BERLIN RIDICULES REPORTS

[The Lowlands' defense measures were characterized in Berlin as "another fear epidemic based on false reports." Informed German quarters there said reports of German military moves along the Lowland border were "so much nonsense that it is doubtful if an official denial will be issued."

Informed sources at Brussels, however, were reported by the Associated Press as saying Belgian secret service reports had inspired the hurried defense measures.

A reliable informant said German aerial operations recently included the photographing of important Belgian industrial and defense areas. A German airman who landed in Belgium with motor trouble was said to have carried such photographs.]

The present position is likened here to the scare which occurred last November, 10, 11, and 12, when German forces, after being on the verge of invading the Low Countries, abandoned the plan.

BELIEVE IT A BLUFF

The prevalent impression in London is that this time too Germany is taking military preparations for possible attack but remains ready as before to abandon them temporarily if the Low Countries are seen to be united and ready to resist. Since this is more than ever the case, hope is voiced here that the present scare, like the previous one, will blow over.

The British War Office did not amplify its two-line midnight communique saying, "The leave from service of the British Expeditionary Force has been temporarily suspended." Official sources explained, however, troops already on furlough would not be recalled immediately.

Nevertheless, it is authoritatively understood the British Government has reason to believe Germany has recently been making defensive military and diplomatic soundings with a view to action against the Low Countries, or alternatively the Balkans or Scandinavia, and it is therefore felt that an early move in one or more of these directions would by no means be surprising.

HOME-WITH-GARDEN OWNERSHIP IS CHILE'S PLAN FOR WORKERS

Christian Science Monitor

SANTIAGO, Chile—A 10-year plan for the construction of 380,000 houses is announced by Health Minister Salvador Allende and Production Minister Oscar Schrake of the Popular Front Government. President Aguirre has given support to this initiative of two of his Socialist Ministers, and further cooperation from the Workers' Compulsory Insurance Bank. The program has been graphically presented, with an abundance of illustrations, at the Ten-year Housing Plan Exhibition on Bernardo O'Higgins Avenue of this city.

The 10-year goal requires annual construction of 38,000 houses. The Socialists state the cost will work out at 286 pesos, or about $9.31, per inhabitant. This "work of peace" is compared with the 312 pesos per head, which is the annual cost of the war to France. This comparison of constructive and destructive policies is forcibly presented in the exhibition.

THIRD OF POPULATION

Minister Allende has calculated that 1,500,000 Chileans, or a third of the population, lack adequate dwellings. There is an immediate deficit for 800,000 inhabitants, and allowance is made for additional housing to accommodate yearly increases in population. Another aim is to eliminate 2,000 slum tenements.

A start will be made on 9,000 houses within one year for Santiago and some provincial cities. The plan as a whole depends on four fundamental aspects: (a) legislation on house rents; (b) improvements to existing houses; (c) emergency constructions; and (d) a permament building program.

Rationalization of the construction industry is envisaged to keep up the rate of house-building and insure systematic planning of the worker's "home standing in its own garden." Manufacture and erection by series has been successfully tested, with the cooperation of the timber, steel and cement trades. A typical dwelling requires six days to finish, as testified by a certificate of a notary, Pedro Cuevas, in the exhibition.

Details of the financing of the 10-year plan have yet to be presented to Parliament. Some measure of coordination is anticipated with existing organizations, such as the State Bank for Popular Housing and the special section of the Insurance Bank. Five hundred million pesos were voted the Production Corporation for new workers' homes. Of this amount credits have been granted to two coal-mining companies to build 1,700 houses.

PRIVATE ENTERPRISE SLUMPS

The Housing Bank's capital has also been fortified by Production Corporation credits. Approximately 1,000 homes were completed up to 1939, since when building has been stimulated afresh. Some 3,000 additional homes are now actively in construction by the Bank.

With the advent of the social organizations and the State-promoted plans, private building enterprise has dwindled in Chile. Private capital was unable to compete with Government-organized credit facilities, and restrictions to house rents made another obstacle. Critics of the 10-year plan allege that it is "too demagogic," and that the country cannot afford the estimated annual cost of 400,000,000 pesos, equal to 25 per cent of the national budget.

Budge Beats Perry In Miami Tourney

Domei Tsushin

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 25—Donald J. Budge, Californian and former world's "No. 1" amateur tennis player, today won the Southeastern Professional Tennis Tournament defeating Fred Perry, of England, in straight sets by the score of 6-1, 7-5, 6-2.

Later, Budge paired with Perry to win the doubles title by defeating the veterans, "Big Bill" Tilden and Vincent Richards, also in straight sets, 7-5, 6-3, 6-4.

3 Fighters Arrive Friday from Hawaii

Three professional fighters will arrive from Honolulu on the Kamakura Maru Friday to appear in local smokers under the auspices of Promoter Kintaro Usuda of the Usuda Boxing Club.

They are Jess Summerford, a colored welterweight; Kid Phillips, American featherweight; and Charles Higa, American of Japanese ancestry bantamweight and flyweight.

All three are reported to be coming with impressive records in Honolulu.

POLISH ARMY REVIEWED

PARIS, Feb. 25—The Polish General Sikorski yesterday reviewed for the first time the special Polish Army which has been formed in France, it is reported here. The troops are mainly miners and landworkers who had been in France at the outbreak of the war. They have been trained by the most modern French methods and have created a magnificent impression.

FINNS HOLDING OUT

HELSINKI, Feb. 25—Reports reaching here today from the Karelian front indicate that the Finns have taken up their positions in the second defense lines about five miles behind the foremost defenses of the Mannerheim Line and are holding out against continued Russian attacks. The Finns claim that their forces are still holding the fortress of Koivisto. The town of Viborg, just behind the Mannerheim Line, has been completely evacuated and, according to unofficial reports, will be set on fire, should the Finns be forced back any further.

Russian attacks on the central front and northeast of Lake Ladoga continue to be repulsed with heavy losses, according to the Finnish claims. On the central front 21 more Russian tanks have been destroyed and two Russian aircraft.

ISLANDS SAID CAPTURED

MOSCOW, Feb. 25—According to the communique issued today, a string of strongly fortified islands off Koivisto has been captured by the Russian troops, and it is claimed that a further 28 Finnish fortifications on the Mannerheim Line have been captured. Army officials have admitted the strength of the Finnish secondary lines.

Activity of Soviet aircraft has been confined to reconnaissance flights, owing to the extremely severe weather.

TO FIRE AT ALL FOREIGN PLANES

STOCKHOLM, Feb. 24—The Northern Military Command has ordered anti-aircraft batteries to open fire on all foreign planes seen flying over Sweden from Finnish territory, it is reported here.

The Government's protest to Moscow against the Russian bombing raid on Swedish territory is understood to have included a demand for compensation for damage caused by the bombs. The incident has provided fresh fuel for the movement which wishes to revise the Government's declared policy of not sending direct military aid to Finland.

SPEARHEAD ATTACK

MOSCOW, Feb. 25—It is claimed here that the United States and the Allies, by giving financial aid to Finland and supplying war materials, are using Finland as a spearhead for an attack on the Soviet Union.

AMINO FIGHTS MOTOYAMA TO A DRAW

In one of the most comical fights seen in many months, Matsuo (Tiger) Amino and Harukichi Motoyama, two welterweights, fought to a draw in the 8-round main event of a smoker Tuesday night in the Hibiya Public Hall. Amino weighed in at 143 pounds and Motoyama at 139 pounds.

Motoyama's clinching was a bit too much for the tough looking Amino in the first two rounds. Thoroughly angered, he made no bones about showing it too and chased Motoyama all over the ring to land a haymaker. But Motoyama just laughed it off and backpedalled even faster and then tied the angry Amino up with holding tactics.

The two pugilists, however, began to do some real fighting from the third round on. Amino, the heavier hitter of the two, finally caught up with Motoyama just before the gong in the third round and landed a right hook to the jaw that knocked Motoyama down

Apparently this punch had a little too much kick for Motoyama because he did more and more clinching as the fight progressed. With the greater reach and scoring more punches, but for his clinching he might have won the fight.

Hideo Fujiwara, 118 pounds, and Yutaka Kameda, 115 pounds, fought to a good draw in the eight-round semi-final.

In the other eight-round bout of the evening, Yuki, 126 pounds, decisioned Kaneko, 125 pounds.

BELGIUM'S WAR POSITION GOOD

Balance Sheet of Economic Status Since Outbreak of Hostilities Reported Fine

Christian Science Monitor

BRUSSELS—A balance sheet of Belgium's economic position since the war made by Professor Bauduin, well-known economist, shows that though many complicated problems await solution, the general situation is good.

Among the first problems to be solved is that of the food supply. Belgium buys from abroad 25 per cent of the money value of its food and 50 per cent of its nourishment value. Under present conditions this country should plan on the assumption of a partial blockade in which it would be obliged to depend upon home supplies to some extent. If so then certain changes are needed in agriculture.

NEED GREATER MILK OUTPUT

The amount of meadow land must be reduced and cattle must be kept more for the production of milk than of meat, and more pigs reared. Less meat and more milk and cheese should find their way into the national diet.

Raw materials are equally important as food. Normally these are imported from the Congo, but control of shipping lessens the possibilities.

Belgium's position is weak in some respects but very strong in others. The unfavorable factors are that it is so dependent upon abroad for foreign trade and so close to the scene of hostilities. But the fact that it can deliver coal abroad considerably helps the favorable economic balance.

FACED WITH PRODUCTION PROBLEM

An unavoidable disorganization of production in the first months of the war led to panic buying and increased unemployment, and to great increases in prices.

It has not yet proved possible to solve the problem of production satisfactorily, particularly as regards increased production of pit-coal.

Until now there has been no currency problem in Belgium and nothing indicates unavoidable exchange difficulties in the future. The balance of payments does not threaten the Belgian franc, though needs of the Treasury are growing heavier each week. But this problem should be solved in Belgium as in other neutral countries, namely by economies, taxation and loans.

Belgium should do everything possible to maintain free communications with its colonies and the army authorities must show more understanding of economic needs. It may be necessary to increase the hours of work so that wages and cost of living may keep pace with each other.

TO RESTRICT PUBLIC UNDERTAKINGS

Meanwhile, the Minister for Public works stated recently that in present circumstances public expenditure schemes will be restricted. Only those which are already in process, such as the Albert Canal, will be completed.

The ordinary budget for 1940 is unchanged at 220,000,000 francs ($36,674,000), of which 170,000,000 francs are for the upkeep of roads, canals and buildings. The extraordinary budget will be for 550,000,000 francs, as against 720,000,000 last year and 1,000,000,000 francs the previous year; 150,000,000 is to be devoted to constructing roads, 235,000,000 francs to canals, 90,000,000 francs to municipal roads and 80,000,000 to buildings.

The economic equipment of the country can be still further improved by an extraordinary budget of 550,000,000 francs and employment thus created.

ECONOMIC CHIEF SAID NEEDED BY LONDON AT WAR

Public Discussion Revealed Forwarding Arguments That Disorder Found Prevalent

By DAVID WILLS

Christian Science Monitor

LONDON—There is growing public discussion in England of the need for a Cabinet Minister in the War Cabinet to deal with all economic matters.

The arguments are supported by instances of disorder in the practical conduct of British economic life, by warnings and theoretical arguments about the financial difficulties which will be caused by blundering along without a policy, and by exhortations to increase the size of the economic effort by an extent which can only be achieved through a centralized economic control.

This is not a peace-time argument between the advocates of private enterprise and government control; in war it is what the government does that determines our effort, and it is urged that the government should do its job efficiently and should recognize that it is the controlling factor in our wartime economy.

Some encouragement was taken by those who advocate this economic coordination from the announcement of financial cooperation between the British and the French. The consequences of this cooperation cannot limit themselves to those generally implied by the most strict use of the term financial. The purely financial results will, of course, be of great importance.

FIXED EXCHANGE RATE

There is to be a fixed exchange rate between francs and pounds for the duration of the war, so that neither government will have to transfer any of its gold or its foreign reserves to the other. There is to be a pooling of gold and foreign exchange assets and of powers to raise foreign credits, and this pool will be very large. The Federal Reserve Board in Washington estimates that the United Kingdom and France together hold about $7,400,000,000 in gold dollar balances and readily marketable American securities

But one phrase of the announced agreement must, if implemented, lead to considerably more than mere financial cooperation. The two governments "will maintain contact as regards their policy in regard to prices." Perhaps this jargon was deliberately used so that it can be pleaded the sentence is such bad English it has no validity!

Clearly, financial cooperation between the two countries on such close terms as are contemplated in the agreement, can only be achieved if there is a common economic policy in both countries. So far, the French seem to have realized far better than the English the magnitude of the sacrifices necessary if we are to win the war.

Second in importance to the attitude of government here to the demand for an Economic Minister is the attitude of labor to the economic policy proposed for war. On the first, the Economist comments that the demand is following the course that has become familiar in these matters. "The Prime Minister has stopped denying that there is any merit in the proposal; he now merely says that it cannot be done yet. If precedent is followed, it will take him 18 months to two years to admit his error and create the post, endowed with inadequate powers and occupied by some mediocrity."

METHOD OF MAKING SACRIFICE

On the second, labor is thinking. It seems to have shifted slightly from the attitude first taken up when John Maynard Keynes proposed his schemes of forced savings (or as he later preferred to call it, deferred pay). Spokesmen for labor then denied the necessity for any reduction in the standard of living of labor in course of the war. The economic committee of the Trades Union Congress is not taking so stubborn a line, and did not immediately denounce Sir John Simon, Chancellor of the Exchequer, when he spoke of the need for financial sacrifices for all sections of the community.

Labor spokesmen now seem to be aware that what is at issue is the method of making the sacrifice, not the sacrifice itself. There is clearly need for limiting the sacrifice in marginal cases; special treatment is needed for those with the lowest incomes near the subsistence level, and for those with large families contrasted with the unmarried or small familied workers. But these are not reasons for extending special treatment to the whole range of wage earners.

SEEK EQUALITY IN SACRIFICES

Just as the financial cooperation between the British and French governments may drive the British government toward a well planned economic policy, so the cooperation between France and British trade unions may drive the British trade unions toward a proper view of their economic position in time of war.

There is a big difference between the positions of the French and British workers. French munition workers are treated as mobilized in the government service and are paid at military rates of pay. British munition workers are in many places earning wages well above their peace-time levels. Five million Frenchmen are under arms, and industry is being carried on with the help of women and boys and old men.

There has been some suggestion of sending British miners to France to work French mines in the absence of the French miners who are mobilized. But this will not meet the sense of justice of the French workers, who naturally would prefer England to increase the number of troops in France and so release French miners to return to their own jobs. Discussion of this and similar problems between the British and French trade unionists can only lead to a greater equality in the sacrifices made by the workers of the two countries.

At present, there is a steady increase in the wages being paid to big groups of workers. Some of these have already been discussed in this column. For the industries covered by statistics of the Ministry of Labor, wage increases coming into operation in September amounted to £128,600 weekly, and to a further £86,000 weekly in October. In November the rate of increase probably accelerated. Unless this process is stopped, there is bound to be an increase in prices caused by the impinging of increased purchasing power upon supplies which cannot be increased.

RESULTS OF WAR ON WORKINGMAN TOLD IN REPORT

Unemployment Said Rising As Result of Mobilization Contrary to Common Belief

Christian Science Monitor

GENEVA—Contrary to the belief that war conditions and large-scale mobilization increase employment, information collected by the International Labor Office here shows that in most belligerent countries and in many neutral countries unemployment rose in the first month of the war and still remains at a relatively high level.

Summarizing the effect of the first four months of war from figures voluntarily submitted by various countries, the I. L. O. in a recently published survey lists four reasons for this rise in unemployment:

TRADES CLOSE DOWN

1. Many small enterprises have closed down, and many small trades have been disorganized by mobilization and civilan evacuation.

In France, for example, nearly half of the country's unemployed are concentrated in Paris, a city which has been particularly affected by dislocations of small-scale industry and trade.

2. Large numbers of women workers have arrived in the labor market, many of them forced into job hunting by the mobilization and many more dismissed from employment in the personal service industries.

3. Considerable numbers of salaried employees and workers in occupations such as the building trades have lost their jobs and have not yet been absorbed into the changed economy.

4. In many couatries trade restrictions have affected employment in export industries or those which depend on imports for their raw materials.

HOW THEY STAND

In Great Britain nearly 200,000 more people were unemployed in mid-October than in mid-August, but by mid-November there was a slight drop of 28,000 as compared with mid-October.

In France, unemployment increased by about 14,000, and in Belgium by over 45,000, in the first month of the war, although, in the latter country, this was followed by a decrease of 29,000 during October.

The percentage of trade unionists unemployed in Denmark rose from 9.5 per cent to 16 per cent by the end of October and to 21.5 per cent by the end of November.

In The Netherlands there was a moderate increase and in Norway a rather substantial rise from 18 per cent in August to 30 per cent in November.

Trade restrictions have thrown many thousands of workers out of employment in Greece. In Germany the number of wholly unemployed persons has remained low, but there appears to have been an increase in short time.

In Switzerland the unemployment situation has remained practically unchanged. Among American countries there has been an increase in Chile but a decrease in Canada and the United States.

The present rate of increase in unemployment, however, has been considerably less rapid than in 1914, the survey states.

The first weeks of the World War in 1914 raised Germany's level of unemployment to such an extent that one-fourth of all the nonmobilized industrial workers were unemployed. And in Great Britain, although no comparable total statistics are available, the Minister of Labor recently declared that "in the second month of the last war the trade union rate of unemployment was more than double what it was before the outbreak."

OPTIMISTIC NOTE

In the United States and in Canada, the survey goes on, there was an attitude of optimism in the first weeks of the present war. Large numbers of unemployed workers were absorbed in industries producing for war needs.

A particularly striking feature of the present situation has been the fact that, paralleling a fairly general increase in total unemployment, shortages of many kinds of skilled labor have been greatly accentuated.

Belgium lacks coal miners. The Netherlands needs skilled workers in several trades. Great Britain and France are concerned with maintaining a sufficient supply of skilled engineers, mechanics, ship-builders, etc., and Germany is taking steps to assure a reserve of properly trained workers for its industrial needs.

Even in the United States, with its vast reservoir of unemployed workers, skilled labor shortages are already acute in several trades and in various parts of the country.

U.S. CAPITAL IN SHANGHAI $200,000,000

American Investments Firmly Rooted in Coast Metropolis During Past 70 Years

Christian Science Monitor

SHANGHAI — American investments in Shanghai amount to approximately $200,000,000, declares a booklet soon to be issued by the American Association, nonpartisan organization of the American community. Under the title "America's Stake In Shanghai", the pamphlet reveals in detail the leading part which Americans have taken in more than 70 years of modern Shanghai history, concluding:

"Americanism is firmly rooted in the life of Shanghai and this constitutes the foundation of America's stake in the city. It is to the advantage of America and China alike that this stake should be preserved."

SHANGHAI FOCAL POINT

Shanghai, according to the booklet, is "the focal point and center of American activity in China. This statement is not intended to minimize the extent of American activity throughout the whole of China or to suggest that the 'closed door' in North China does not affect Americans, but if the United States were to lose its invested interests and trade rights in Shanghai, American interests in China would suffer a most paralyzing blow."

During normal years, it is stated, approximately 65 to 70 per cent of all American exports to China entered through the port of Shanghai —much of this being for redistribution throughout China, but much being directly consumed in this city. Continuing:

"There are approximately 400 American business firms and cultural organizations established in China, which are either directly or indirectly engaged in promoting the use of American products and the spread of American ideas in China.

"Most of these organizations are located in Shanghaai, or have their principal offices there. Many important American companies have branch offices in Shanghai; two large American banks play an important part in the financial structure of Shanghai and China trade; American engineering firms have built modern skyscrapers with American materials; the public utilities such as the Shanghai Power Company and the Shanghai telephone system are American-owned and operated.

U.S. NEWSPAPER POPULAR

"American owned and edited newspapers have a wide circulation among the Chinese as well as the foreign population, and American-made motion pictures play to packed houses every day in Shanghai, where the audiences are always more than two-thirds Chinese. . . .

"Aside from the commercial interests of the United States in Shanghai, there also is the fundamental element of Shanghai's even more important service as a base or headquarters for the propagation of American democratic ideas and western civilization generally in the Orient."

Commercial and cultural organizations and their directors are termed the pioneers setting up in Shanghai and in China "the growing demand for "the American way' and the American product." In early 1937—just before the beginning of the present war—"the United States was just beginning to share in the potentialities of China's vast modernization program.

BOTTOM FALLS OUT

But from August, 1937, the beginning of the China Affair, the bottom fell out. Export figures from America to Shanghai for the first six months of 1938 showed a 63 per cent drop as compared with the same period of 1937.

There was brief recovery during the first half of 1939 but the latter half of the year showed trade about on a par with the last half of 1937. Imports from China to America tell the same story, with a 62 per cent decline.

Still representing two-thirds of America's total stake in China, Shanghai is declared vital. The booklet says: "The necessity for retaining America's freedom of action in Shanghai is practically synonymous with the retention of American rights and activity in the Far East generally."

K.B.S. SENDING NOH COSTUMES, MASKS TO ITALY

Society Gives Exhibition Of Collection Here Before Shipping It to Rome

The Kokusai Bunka Shinkokai (Society for International Cultural Relations) gave an exhibition Tuesday afternoon of Noh masks and costumes which are to be sent to the Propaganda Ministry in Rome. The exhibition was in the form of a tea at which the host was Marquis Yorisada Tokugawa, Vice President of the K. B. S. and attended by the Italian Ambassador, Giacinto Auriti and other members of the Embassy as well as many prominent Japanese.

Recently the Italian Embassy received a cable from the Italian Propaganda Ministry asking for the loan of Noh masks and costumes to be exhibited in Rome in April. The K.B.S. has managed to collect 16 masks and costumes which will be sent to Rome as a gift on board the N. Y. K. liner Hakusan Maru leaving Japan Saturday, March 16, from Japan.

Great interest in Japanese art is now growing in Italy. This interest has become continually greater since the presentation of Japanese drama there some years ago. It is fortunate that the son of Mr. Nogami, the well-known authority on Noh plays is at present in Rome, and will be able to explain the costumes when they are displayed there.

These beautiful masks and costumes which were shown to members of the Italian Embassy and Japanese residents interested have been given by several prominent Japanese here. Two costumes were presented by Baron Dan, five masks and costumes by Marquis Hosokawa, four costumes and seven masks by Marquis Maeda, three costumes by Baron Mitsui, and three masks, one costume and various accessories for the Noh costume, were presented by Yuwao Kongo, the well-known professional expert of the Noh dance.

The reception exhibition was attended by about 100 persons including many prominent Japanese. Among those present were Marquis Tokugawa; the Italian Ambassador Giacinto Auriti, who has studied many Japanese arts and has a keen interest in things Japanese; Baron Takamine Mitsui; Baron S. Morimura; the Italian Counselor and Mrs. Paulo Cortese; the Italian Military Attache Colonel Guido Bertoni; the Italian Press Attache and Mrs. Mirko Ardmagni; the First Secretary of the Italian Embassy, Count Pio Macchi de Cellere, the Second Secretary of the Embassy, Dr. Franco Bounous, and Gaetano Aulisio, correspondent for Stefani in Tokyo.

During the afternoon photographs were taken of those who attended the exhibition and tea was served later in the afternoon for the Italian residents who attended the exhibition, and officials of the K.B.S.

The exhibition and the tea which followed it were informal and guests were invited. Apart from the Italian residents present there were no other foreigners attending it.

Ota, Japan's Dean Of Sports Writers Dies

Funeral service will be held at Kamakura at 2 pm. March 2 for Shishu Ota, 61, dean of all Japanese sports writers in the country, who died from bronchitis on Monday.

A native of Kagawa prefecture, he was beginning in 1906 news editors of the Niroku Shimbun, Chuo Shimbun and the Kokumin Shimbun, then assistant managing editor of the Yomiuri Shimbun until he became editor of the magazine "Undokai" or "Sports Magazine" in 1921. In 1930, he became adviser to the sports department of the Kokumin Shimbun.

He was considered one of the best baseball writers. In his days, he was an athlete of considerable fame, starring in track and field, judo and sumo.

He is survived by a daughter, Masako, 23, who was to have been married on February 28.

SUBSTITUTE FOR CEMENT IS FOUND

Acute Shortage of Product Makes New Find Valuable For Munitions Factories

A substitute for industrial cement was recently discovered and arrangements have been made to announce the discovery in the next report of the Civil Engineering Experimental Laboratory, the Nichi Nichi reports.

There has been an acute shortage of industrial cement for use in munition factories lately, civil engineering enterprises throughout the country along with the Engineering Department of the Ministry of Home Affairs have suffered countless inconveniences due to this shortage.

TO INCREASE SUPPLY

The Home Affairs Ministry had asked the Civil Engineering Experimental Laboratory to conceive some method of increasing the present manufacturing supply, or else find some substitute. The Laboratory took up the request and held several discussion meetings, ordering its experts to "tackle" the job.

The "hint" for the discovery was gathered at one of these meeting when the talk centered around the cement which used to be imported in great quantities during the early part of the Meiji era, from France. When a shipyard in Yokohama was being built under the direction of French technicians and the cement was imported into the country, it was decided that due to shipping rates, this could not be continued long. The plan was changed, and there was an immediate hunt for some substitute to be found somewhere on the mainland.

The Laboratory technicians reflected over this past incident and sent some of its technicians on a search throughout the country, testing and investigating rocks, sand or clay. The result of their search was that rocks and sands used in pavements and in embankment work would serve as splendid substitutes for the present industrial cement.

This "natural cement" as it will be termed, can be found mainly in Kyoto, Okayama, Toyama, Ishikawa, Niigata prefectures and Kyushu and Sado districts. A variety of earth, with the characteristic of basalt lime or pure sand, and containing certain elements that would cause the earth to harden when mixed with water, is found in almost inexhaustiable abundance in these regions.

The Ministry of Home Affairs has decided to put the name of "neutral cement" to it, and send it out to various places where engineering work is underway by April.

Dr. Shinzo Fujii, head of the Civil Engineering Experimental Laboratory said, "Natur alcement has been in use for quite a while in foreign countries. In the United States, under the name of Rosedale cement, over 2,000,000 barrels have been put to use recently, while in France, about 40 per cent in use now is natural cement. England has been making use of Parker cement in large quantities.

USING ORDINARY KIND

"In Germany, they have been using only the ordinary industrial cement, but recent figures show that there has been a tremendous increase. It may be due to some secret process they have of manufacturing the cement. Japan has not come up to the level of the other countries, and I regret it extremely. The newly discovered natural cement is made from a special kind of rock and earth formed after volcanic action, and as Japan is favored with volcanoes, we are quite sure that we will be able to obtain large quantities of it from different parts of the country."

DIRECT LINE RADIO TRANSMISSION SLATED FOR SIX CITIES IN AUTUMN

Radio broadcasting by direct transmission over telephone and electric light lines, instead of through the ether as heretofore, is planned by the Ministry of Communications.

This unique departure from the existing scheme of things is designed primarily as defense measure, in order to prevent enemy airplanes from picking up broadcasts, according to the Hochi.

The system, reportedly the first of its kind in the world, will go in effect in Japan's six largest cities next fall, and at later dates in rural districts.

EXPERIMENTS CONDUCTED

This line radio system was experimented with last autumn when air-defense practice was practiced. The investigation section of the Engineering Bureau of the Communications Ministry is engaged in making preparations for establishing the new broadcasting method in each of the six largest cities in Japan including Tokyo, Osaka and Kobe.

According to the present plan, transmission of electric waves will be made through telephone wires. Every telephone office will have a transmitting apparatus through which the waves received from broadcasting stations will be sent to all telephone owners. The telephone owners will be provided with wave-dividers by which the messages for telephone and those for broadcasting will be clearly distinguished.

NEW SYSTEM

Regarding the line radio to be transmitted on electric light wire, which will be the first such system in the world if materialized, authorities will apply it later on in the country districts because all electric-light lines in large cities are buried in the ground.

For those listeners who have no telephone, arrangements will be made so that through a telephone owner's receiving set, about 30 neighbors will be able to have the distribution of broadcast waves on wire. What will be needed on the part of listeners-in against the new system will be the telephone owner's wave-divider to be attached to his telephone apparatus, and new coils to be prepared, one by each listener, whether he has a telephone or not.

The authorities are now engaged in figuring out a rate schedule.

mines, he continued, and added, "We see our way to mastering the magnetic mine and other variants of the same idea. Without conceit, we do not feel at all outdone in science by the Nazis.

"We shall not be content if we do not maintain control of the seas up to the highest standards of the last war, and enable the Navy once again to play a decisive part in the victory of the Allies", Mr. Churchill concluded.

FUNDS TO BUY PLANES

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27—In a statement by the Secretary of the United States Treasury, Mr. Morganthau, on the economic and financial strength of the Allies, he remarks that he is convinced that Britain and France have enough foreign exchange to pay for £260,000,000 worth of airplanes over the next eighteen months.

FINNS RETREAT

HELSINKI, Feb. 27—It was reported this morning that although the Finns have abandoned the Koivisto fortress they managed to remove all the guns and to withdraw the garrison with full equipment. It is claimed that the garrison could have held out longer, but it was thought desirable to withdraw the men and guns to other places where they could be useful, rather than stage a spectacular last stand. Elsewhere on the Karelian Isthmus the Finns are holding their second line of defense despite terrific pressure.

Other advices tell of bitter fighting in the far north, including a large-scale aerial engagement.

GERMANY ACTIVE

BERLIN, Feb. 27—Reports circulating here indicate that Germany is extremely active in pressing Moscow to attempt and accept mediation with a view to terminating the Russo-Finnish war and that the Soviets are lending a receptive ear to this suggestion now that the Red Army is scoring successes.

ST. JOSEPH'S TOPS A.S. CAGERS BY 23-22 SCORE

The St. Joseph's cagers of Yokohama defeated the American School of Tokyo at the latter's gymnasium, 23-22, Wednesday afternoon, avenging their 34-19 setback last week at their home courts.

During the initial quarter the two fives worked quickly and cautiously but the visitors appeared a bit superior. Kranz of S. J. C. scored the first basket but Fisher shortly afterward found the meshes to equalize. Wolschke slipped in a goal to put the Yokohama five out in front.

GRAHAM SCORES

Captain Graham, Yokohama center, registered a pair of two-pointers. Downs looped a fine shot for Tokyo. In rapid succession Brown and lanky Walser tossed two into the rim for Tokyo from the field and the count was knotted 8-all. Downs broke away and aimed true. A moment later before the conclusion of the period Eymard of the S.J.C. eluded the defense and dropped in a basket that tied the score at half time 10-10.

With resumption of play, Walser tallied from the pivot position. Eymard added another for Yokohama, which made the count 12-12. Captain Horn hooped one. Fisher failed twice on free tosses, but came back strong to spot a goal, whilst Walser swished in his third marker. Eymard and Kranz each registered for S.J.C., but the A.S. still led. It was Downs who increased that margin just before the third 8-minute period ended.

The fourth quarter was beyond all doubt the most exciting.

Eymard's conversion of a free throw at the beginning of this period prepared the way for Yokohama. But Horn tallied again and the A.S. was leading 22-19. Five or more minutes of play still remained. In a tussle beneath the basket, a long thin arm shot out and lifted the pellet into the hoop. Wolschke was credited for this performance. Now the minutes were wearing away with the A.S. still leading 22-21. Nonchalantly the shifty Wolschke pocketed another two-pointer, which gave his school the edge, 23 to 22.

EXCITING FINISH

A time out preceded the last twenty seconds, which were hectic beyond description. In the scrambles that followed neither team was able to alter the score, as the cheers from the stands drowned the timer's final blast.

The box score follows:

St. Joseph's

	G.	F.	P.
Eymard (rf)	3	1	7

when their ships were sunk by the Germans and many of their sailors drowned on the high seas. "Let us make a stand not on legal pedantry but on humanity," he said. "Judging by the Altmark incident, this seems to be the opinion not only of the British nation but also of the civilized world."

TURKISH PAPER COMMENTS

ANKARA, Feb. 27—The newspaper "Ulus" comments today on Germany's idea of neutrality. "The classical meaning of "neutrality" has been modified by Germany," it said. "She deems neutrality violated if any states should decline o sell her goods at her prices or should accept the restrictions of the contraband control or combine to preserve their independence,—in short, unless they serve the aims of her foreign policy. The meaning of "aggression" has suffered stranger changes. Thus, the Germans were not the aggressors against Poland: the Allies were the aggressors for trying to thwart that attack. When she destroyed Czechoslovakia, Germany was only defending herself against her victim. The partition of Poland was merely an act of self-defence and the Poles by resisting were the aggressors. Such new definitions have at least the merit of throwing light on German policy," the paper concludes.

WHIPPING UP CAMPAIGN

BERLIN, Feb. 28—On the eve of the arrival here of the United States undersecretary of State, Sumner Welles, the German press and radio are whipping up a "Destroy Britain" campaign. They are trying to make out that peace is impossible while Britain's "terror" remains.

CATHOLICS SINGLED OUT

ROME, Feb. 28—According to a broadcast from the Vatican last night Russia and Germany agreed on August 30 last year to make a joint fight against all Christian religions. The Catholic clergy is specially singled out for attack in this campaign for their inimicable attitude to the systems ruling in both Germany and Russia. Both sides have agreed to keep each other currently informed.

SHIPPING BANNED

ISTANBUL, Feb. 28—The Government has ordered all ships flying the Turkish flag to return to Turkey, according to reports circulating here. No Turkish ships are allowed to sail in foreign waters for a while.

TO FETE EXETER MEN

LONDON, Feb. 28—The officers and men of H. M. S. Exeter will be entertained in the city of Exeter on Thursday in recognition of their part in the battle of the River Plate last December, which resulted in the destruction of the German pocket battleship Graf Spee. The Captain will be given the Freedom of the city.

BACON RATION DOUBLED

LONDON, Feb. 28—It is pointed out in official quarters here that the doubling of the bacon ration as from tomorrow is due entirely to the improved position of bacon supplies and that this position has been attained not by abnormal slaughter of home grown pigs but solely as a result of increased imports. The relaxation of rationing thus emphasizes the strength of the British shipping position.

Open Golf Tourney Slated May 28-30

The national open golf championship for this year will be held at the Asaka course in Tokyo on May 28, 29, and 30 it was announced by the Japan Golf Association late Thursday.

One of the features of the Association's plans for 1940 is that the national professional championship will be held at Fukuoka for the first time, the dates selected being September 16, 17, 18 and 19.

The national amateur championships are slated for the Inagawa course on October 9, 10, 11 and 12.

SAFETY ZONE PLAN SCANNED BY AMERICAS

Delegates to Session In Brazil Study Method Of Declaration Effective

Christian Science Monitor

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil—Delegates of seven American nations, designated as a Neutrality Committee by the Pan-American Conference, are discussing measures for keeping the war away from the Western Hemisphere.

Experts on political science and international law, the delegates have authority to plan a practical method for safeguarding the "safety zone" around the Americas instituted at Panama by the 31 American Republics last Oct. 3 and to treat with those who violate it.

Although the Committee has no authority to make any agreements for the American nations, it is expected to recommend measures which, depending upon their form, can be handled as joint declarations or adopted by the individual governments.

NEW METHODS PROPOSED

Great Britain was reported to have suggested to the 21 Pan-American republics that their 300-mile neutrality "safety zone" be enforced by some new methods. What these methods were not disclosed, but American officials said they probably would not be acceptable to the Pan-American nations.

A usually reliable informant said the suggestion was contained in the British reply to the protest delivered by the American nations on Dec. 23 against violation of the neutrality zone.

The British were understood to have expressed sympathy with the principle of the 300-mile zone but to have termed it unenforceable as presently constituted.

Britain's reply to the Dec. 23 protest, which followed upon the battle of Uruguay between three British cruisers and the German pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee, was delivered to Panama for relay to the Pan-American republics.

MODIFICATION WEIGHED

With the Graf Spee incident in mind, American officials apparently are convinced that some means must be found for putting teeth in the declaration of Panama or that the neutrality zone must be modified—possibly by reducing its scope, now extending an average of 300 miles from the coast.

Its strongest proponents agree that in its present form its effectiveness is questionable unless Germany, France, and Britain agree to respect it.

(In Washington, a spokesman said the Committee had "no intention of agreeing upon the use of force to belligerents." He suggested there were means, however, of making it unprofitable for belligerent warships to operate in American waters, such as barring them from obtaining supplies from American ports or putting in for repairs.)

If precedent is followed, Dr. Afranio Mello Franco will preside over the Committee.

The United States is represented by Dr. Charles Ghequiere Fenwick, political scientist and Bryn Mawr professor. Other nations represented are Argentina, Chile, Mexico, Venezuela, and Costa Rica.

PROTEST REJECTED

WASHINGTON—The American Government has turned down a British protest against alleged discrimination against British shipping in the Neutrality Act.

In making this known today, Secretary of State Cordell Hull said that the purpose of the portion of the Neutrality Act mentioned in the British protest was to prevent involvement of the United States in the European war and did not constitute discrimination.

The British note was dated Nov. 9, five days after the proclamation of the Neutrality Act. The American reply was dated Dec. 1. Officials are now awaiting a response from the British to the American reply.

The British protest contended that, under the Neutrality Act, American and other neutral vessels were permitted to carry goods other than arms, ammunition, and implements of war to ports within certain specified areas without obtaining transfer of title to a foreign purchaser.

KOGOCHI RESERVOIR CONSTRUCTION SLOWED BY MATERIALS SHORTAGES

Construction work on the Kogochi reservoir on the upper Tama river, Tokyo prefecture, which was to be completed in 1942, is being delayed due to shortage of labor and building materials, according to the Chugai Shogyo.

The reservoir was planned by Tokyo Municipality to provide Tokyo citizens with sufficient water, in addition to the Murayama and Yamaguchi reservoirs now being used.

Work on it was started in July, 1937 on a five-year plan following approval by the Home Ministry. Its progress has been slow due to shortages of cement, iron and other building materials as well as labor.

Recently only 290 laborers have been available a day though 1,500 laborers are required for the work. As an expediency measure, the Tokyo Municipal Office will lend 600 laborers engaged in other engineering works.

It is believed that at this rate six or seven more years will be required to complete the work. The Tokyo Municipal Office will ask permission of the Municipal Assembly for approval to postpone the completion of the work until 1945.

U.S. Paving the Way For A Better World

Domei Tsushin

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28—Secretary of State Cordell Hull disclosed in an interview today that American diplomats and foreign governments all over the world have started conversations with a view to making a better world after the end of the current war. He said the conversations had nothing to do with the present war conditions but referred solely to making preparations for economic and military adjustments in the post-war period.

He said unless the forces of peace and stability are organized during the period of transition and reconstruction after the current war, the forces of autarchy and regimentation and economic totalitarianism, which followed the last World War, would probably spread again, perhaps with even more disastrous results.

Mr. Hull declined to reveal whether the United States has submitted any specific plans for the post-war world order. However, he said he had sent copies of his February 9 statement on contacts with neutrals with a view to establishing a better world to all American representatives abroad as a basis for starting conversations.

waters by British warships and escorted to Malta.

The Greek passenger steamer Leon was stopped and searched by an armed British merchantman on her way from Patras to the Island of Leukas. When the Greek captain demanded details for entries in his ship's logbook, the British captain refused to disclose the identity of the British vessel's name, which was painted out on the stern and bow of the ship.

PALESTINE SITUATION SHAKEY

AMSTERDAM, Feb. 29—That the situation in Palestine is far from stable is evident from the statement made by British Colonial Secretary Malcolm MacDonald in the House of Commons yesterday.

The Minister announced the British Government has imposed certain restrictions on the transfer of real estate in Palestine without previous consultation with the League of Nations.

The new regulations issued by the British High Commissioner forbid the transfer of real property to persons, who are not Palestine Arabs, in two zones, one which comprises hilly country and certain districts in the vicinity of Gheza and Berheba. The prohibition of transfer of land to persons who are not Palestine Arabs is general and unconditional. In other zones restrictions refer only to the land already in possession of Palestine Arabs without special permission of the High Commissioner. The transfer will be granted only in exceptional cases, however.

The second zone comprises certain parts of the Jesrael plain, part of the coast region between Haifa and Es Tantura Aswellas regions in the administrative districts of Er Ramleh and Bersheba. Secretary of Colonies MacDonald declared that a copy of the new regulations with a memorandum containing explanations have been forwarded to the League of Nations.

The Labor party leader Major Attlee protested sharply against the British government's procedure which he declared tantamount to ignoring the League of Nations. In reply to Attlee's criticism, MacDonald explained that in view of the delicate situation in Palestine, the British government did not deem it advisable to postpone the putting into operation of the new regulations until the League of Nations approval had been obtained. In spite of the Minister's explanation, several members of the government parties, among them conservative members and former Colonial Secretary Amery, voiced their misgivings.

MacDonald's reply to another conservative member who asked why the government had taken this measure only now after six months of peace in Palestine caused visible alarm in the House since th Minister declared "The peace might have been prejudiced if controlled sale of land had not be introduced."

REICH EDITORS MEET

WIESBADEN, Feb. 29—Editorial duties during war were discussed by Doctor Dietrich, the Reich's press chief, when he spoke at a conference of German editors and members of "propaganda companies" here yesterday. With the establishment of the "propaganda companies," a completely new kind of war reporting has been created, he declared. "You who work among men at the front and share their life," Dietrich said, "must hold all Germans separate."

CLOSER WATCH OF YOUTH URGED BY U.S. GROUP

Rochester, N. Y., Meeting Of W. C. T. U. Stresses Idea Of Child Welfare Education

Christian Science Monitor

ROCHESTER, N. Y.,—Education of adults to make them constantly watchful of the welfare of children is as important as education children themselves to the dangers of liquor and narcotics, speakers told closing sessions of the sixty-fifth annual convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union here recently.

The convention was on record today as being opposed to the so-called "ambulatory treatment" of drug addicts as the result of revelations by Mrs. Pearl Kendall Hess, of Orange, Calif., that a movement was under way to give "incurables" stipulated amounts in clinics. Acting a day before the resolutions committee was scheduled to report, the delegates condemned the proposal "as contrary to the purpose of existing narcotic laws," and as notoriously "unsuccessful" wherever tried.

The convention also recommended destruction of marijuana weeds and suppression of the traffic rather than dissemination of information regarding its effects. The latter method, the convention held, "is apt to arouse curiosity or to cause sensational publicity."

"If our narcotics education program is to be a success in the schools, the parents should be informed as well as the children," said Miss Ethel Bliss Baker, President of the Minnesota State W. C. T. U. "Otherwise, lessons learned will be nullified by parents' attitudes at home. Every parent of school children has a solemn obligation to belong to the Parent-Teacher Association. Our members should not be chided for belonging to other service organizations. They are taking their Christianity into other fields."

Miss Baker issued "a word of caution" to be on the alert for "fly-by-night groups" seeking to use organizations with the prestige of the W. C. T. U. for personal aggrandizement. She urged members to be watchful for "undesirable motives covered by high-sounding phrases" and to weed out evidences of prejudice and biased opinions within "our non-sectarian organization."

The temperance cause has been aided by thousands of young persons who have been made to feel assured of themselves by winning Willard awards in parliamentary usage, Mrs. Warren T. Steele, of Longview, Wash., said. She called for a continuance of the organizing genius of Miss Willard, founder of the movement in 1874 that resulted in young men and women being graduated into temperance leaders from youth temperance councils and loyal temperance legions.

MEXICO SEES REJECTION OF U.S. DOCTRINE

Intensive Speculation Follows In Mexico City Circles; Nation Trying to Sell Oil to U.S.

Christian Science Monitor

MEXICO, D.F.—Rejection by President Cardenas of the Monroe Doctrine as an instrument of United States policy acceptable to Mexico "and other Latin-American nations" caused intensive speculation in all circles here. Coming at a time when Mexico's Minister of Finance, Eduardo Suarez, is in the United States seeking new outlets for Mexican oil it is generally interpreted that the two incidents are related.

A careful analysis of he President's highly important statement of foreign policy leads to the conclusion that it was made to forestall diplomatic pressure upon Mexico for a settlement of the oil controversy. Other conclusions may later be forthcoming when the surprising statement is further illuminated and discussed, but the first impression is that it was impelled by reports from Washington that the State Department is about to dispatch a note requesting intergovernmental arbitration of the oil question.

FIRST OFFER REJECTED

Whether such a note or request is forthcoming, it is impossible to ascertain here. The State Department's offer months ago to arbitrate the question was rejected both by the oil companies and the Mexican Government. Yet in November the Mexican Ambassador to Washington, Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, told this correspondent that Mexico desired intergovernmental dealings on the question.

Recent press reports from Washington indicate that the State Department may be seeking a solution through diplomatic exchange, or if this is refused, through carrying the case to the International Court at The Hague.

Whatever official program is planned by the United States the Cardenas attack upon the Monroe Doctrine which, the President said, "has often been used as a pretext for intervention," carried the clear threat of Mexico's resistance to diplomatic pressure. It further implies that Mexico, if pressed, will appeal to other Latin-American nations for solidarity in resisting "any menace to the sovereignty" of Mexico.

To make such an appeal Mexico would invoke the Nonintervention Pact signed at Buenos Aires in 1936 and the recently adopted Panama declarations. While such action is not specifically forecast by the President it is implied in his statement. Even greater emphasis is placed upon this definition of policy through the fact that it was expressed a few days earlier in similar terms by the Foreign Minister, Eduardo Hay.

'NEVER RECOGNIZED'

The Cardenas declarations, made in a press interview, are as follows:

"The Monroe Doctrine was never recognized, nor ever could be, by Mexico or the other nations of Latin America, while it was only the expression of a unilateral policy which the United States imposed with the double objectives of excluding European countries from this continent and of defending its own interests in America. This doctrine, badly interpreted and applied beyond its original intention, was often used by the United States as a pretext for intervention.

"Moreover from the moment in which the Nonintervention Pact, proposed by Mexico and signed by all of the American republics in the Buenos Aires Peace Conference during 1936, a pact in which all of the nations of America pledged not to intervene directly or indirectly in the internal affairs of other nations, it has been accepted that Monroe Doctrine has ceased to exist with the characteristics previously attributed to it.

"In the same Buenos Aires Conference the principle of mutual consultations between American governments, if any one of them was threatened with aggression, was adopted. By this action, far from admitting the right of one country to protect another, with or without consent, the interdependence and unity of all American nations was recognized and the obligation of each to assume as its own responsibility any menace to the sovereignty of a sister state.

"Later in the Panama consultations this idea was complemented and confirmed by the inter-American security accords so that there was established the principle of mutual consultation in case any American nation, under the jurisdiction of a non-American state, were forced to change its sovereignty and thereby create by such action a danger to continental security.

SOLIDARITY A SUBSTITUTE

"In consequence, rather than to say that the principle of the Monroe Doctrine was accepted at Panama, it should be said that the Doctrine has been totally abandoned and the principle of inter-American solidarity substituted for it.

Following this highly significant statement of policy President Cardenas remarked that agreement on the oil question was still possible.

No direct connection between the two was made but the logical conclusion is that Mexico, through the reiteration of its rejection of the Monroe Doctrine in statements made by the President and the Foreign Minister, is maneuvering itself into a position to claim interference in its internal affairs if diplomatic pressure is brought to bear for a solution of the oil question.

A further underlining of Mexico's insistence upon its independence and national sovereignty was made at the banquet recently given by Ambassador Josephus Daniels, as dean of the diplomatic corps, for President Cardenas. The Mexican President at that event described the "American ideal" as one in which there "exists complete equality among all the sovereign nations, based on friendship and respect, and in which there are no distinctions due to differences in military and economic power."

3 Honolulu Boxers Arrive for Fights Here

Three fighters with impressive records in Honolulu arrived on the Kamakura Maru Friday for bouts here at the invitation of the Usuda Boxing Club.

They were: Charles Higa, 22, second generation Japanese, top ranking flyweight in Hawaii with but two defeats in 26 bouts; Kid Felipe, Filipino, 25, featherweight champion of Hawaii; and Jerome Summerford, colored, 22, welterweight.

Indications are that they will make their debut at a smoker at the Kokugikan on March 20.

CULEBRA NAVAL BASE PROPOSED

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29—Creation of a new United States naval base in Culebra bight on the western coast of Costa Rica, is said to be one outcome of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's inspection tour of the Panama Canal Zone.

Such plans are reportedly substantiated by news from Panama that Costa Rica President Rafael Calderon Guardia will visit Washington in mid-March to "discuss the military situation in Caribbean waters."

U. S. Naval circles are reportedly opposed to the plan, however, on various grounds, including contention the Gulf of Fonesca, between Nicaragua and Honduras is larger and better located strategically for Canal defense.

MORE ON ALTMARK

OSLO, Norway, Feb. 29—All papers here this morning published views of Professor Philip C. Jessup, well known American jurist, on the Altmark incident.

Professor Jessup held that elementary principles of international law require that belligerent warships shall abstain from any act of war in neutral waters and points out that the Altmark had right of passage through Norwegian waters.

In support of his thesis, Professor Jessup cites what he terms "one of the best known British works on international law" in which it is stated that extraterritorial rights enjoyed by warships by virtue of universally recognized rule of international law do not lapse, even in war time, during their stay in neutral ports.

NEITHER CONTEST

Neither British nor Norwegian governments, said the professor, contest that the Altmark was a warship. Consequently, prisoners of war on board the Altmark could not legally be released even when the ship called at a neutral port. They could have been freed legally, only if they had been landed.

As to whether action of the British destroyer Cossack could be justified as a reprisal, Professor Jessup stressed that any reprisals against Norway would have to be based on either neglect by Norwegian authorities of duties imposed by neutrality or on commission by them of illegal acts. Such basis, he said, did not exist.

GIFT PARCEL RESTRICTIONS EXPLAINED

AMSTERDAM, Feb. 29—The London correspondent of the "Telegraaf" reports that restrictions ordered by Holland regarding sending of "gift parcels" to Germany was the result of pressure by England in the course of Dutch-British trade negotiations.

SECRET SERVICE GETS MONDAY

AMSTERDAM, Feb. 29—British budget estimates for the fiscal year 1940-41 revealed expenditures for the secret service are more than doubled over last year's.

Expenditures will total one and one half million pounds, according to reports here.

been before. His messages have added to the respect in which he is held.

Work proceeded steadily on the new motion picture theater even while war rumors increased, and the Cathay is now completed as an up-to-the-minute cinema palace.

Because films had been banned by the censor, Singapore wondered if it would be able to see "The Confessions of a Nazi Spy." Would the German Consul-General again have his way as it is alleged that he did in the case of "Bengal Lancer"? The Appeal Board gave way and the spy picture was shown in a tense atmosphere. It has had the longest run of any film save the Tarzan series, and in view of the mixed population here that is surprising.

Another subject for comment has been the new Supreme Court building. It has lately been opened, and one of the finest structures in this part of the world now takes its regular place in the scheme of things, but its architecture is under criticism.

When not seen at close quarters, the dome which surmounts the building does not appear too ungraceful, but a distant view indicates that the dome has been placed on a building far too small for it. It is when the interior is explored that one is surprised, for no sign of the dome appears.

About such things censored correspondence columns can and do speak. At the Singapore Rotary Club they have recently had an exposition on the art of public speaking. Seldom has such attention been paid to a discourse at the Club, and yet the subject was almost abstruse and difficult for many members whose English is not their strong point. That such things are still going on in this city is good. It shows, indeed, that there is still sanity left.

communication with the English. This has been done, and is being done, with every ship about to carry contraband to England, regardless of its nationality."

It is pointed out here that the German aim does not stop at vessels carrying goods for Britain, but sinks without warning peaceful neutrals trading among themselves.

The Government have taken steps to check the organized trade in food parcels with Germany. It is announced that from tomorrow packages of foodstuffs leaving Holland for abroad may not weigh more than six and a half pounds. Previously they could weigh up to 28 pounds. Only foodstuffs consigned from one individual to another will be accepted. Food sent by shops will thus be refused.

At the beginning of the war German organizations in America offered to send food from Holland to Germany. People with friends or relations in Germany supplied dollars, but in fact their kindness has been abused. Many dollars from Americans have been seized by the Nazi authorities to offset Germany's shortage of foreign exchange.

ASK END TO MINES

OSLO, Feb. 29—The Norwegian Foreign Minister, Professor Koht, announced today that Norway, Denmark and Sweden have decided to ask the belligerents to stop laying mines. The requests will be made separately by each of them. 350 Norwegians have lost their lives as a result of German methods of sea warfare, and of the 50 ships sunk nine were torpedoed and 33 mined, and the cause of the sinking of the others is unknown.

It was declared that Norway did not like the British contraband control policy, but she could not follow Germany's advice to cut off trade with Britain. Germany was not justified in sinking Norwegian ships touching British contraband control ports.

GIBRALTAR IS EFFICIENT

GIBRALTAR, Feb. 29—The naval authorities here announced yesterday that the time required for clearance of United States steamers during the period February 17—25 averaged under eight hours, with the exception of one vessel which had no clearance papers.

MENZIES SETS UP PLAN

MELBOURNE, Feb. 29—The Prime Minister, Mr. Menzies, announced here this afternoon plans regarding the Empire Air Training scheme. "Australia is well on the way to becoming a great air power," he said. Under the Empire air scheme the Commonwealth would have three times the number of planes that they had in the Royal Australian Air Force before the war. These planes, taken in conjunction with the Navy will make the Commonwealth secure against attack.

The Federation Government has decided to create an Aircraft Production Commission under the Ministry of Supply. This Commission will supervise the production and maintenance of the aircraft required under the Empire air scheme. In making this announcement today the Prime Minister explained that the Commission would exercise control over all schemes for the manufacture of aircraft. It would also see to the limitation of profits in the manufacture of aircraft.

CAMBRIDGE BEATS OXFORD IN BOAT RACE

Domei Tsushin

LONDON, March 2—Cambridge beat Oxford by five lengths in their traditional boat race held today over a reduced 1½-mile upstream course at Henley.

The event was the 92nd boat race between Oxford and Cambridge since their first contest in 1829. Oxford has been able to win only three races since 1920, in 1923, 1937 and 1938.

Cambridge jumped into the lead from the start and gradually increased its lead throughout the race. The winning time was 9 minutes and 28 seconds.

With a steady stroke averaging 32 beats to the minute, he Cambridge crew led by a length at the quarter mile post and continued to improve its position to hit the half-way mark in the time of 4 minutes and 25 seconds. Oxford challenged several times in the last half of the race as Cambridge's stroke dropped slightly but the Light Blues met the threat and pulled steadily away from the Oxford crew to win easily.

Boat Race Day at Henley today was almost comparable with Boat Race Day at Putney despite the European hostilities and the shortened course. An enormous crowd four and five tiers deep lined the towpath along the course and thronged Henley bridge. Seven hundred children who were evacuated from London at the start of the European war in September were among the spectators.

METAXAS MAKES GRIP ON GREECE MUCH TIGHTER

War in Europe, World Situation Require Strong Hand for Small Power

Christian Science Monitor

ATHENS—Today, and more than before, Gen. John Metaxas is the strong man of Greece. War in Europe and an international situation requiring a strong hand and concerted public opinion have etched his position in clearer outline.

General Metaxas is somewhat unique among European dictators. He is not a popular hero, in the ordinary sense of the word. He does not look like a dictator, and in a crowd you would never notice him.

He has no interest in public spectacle; makes no impassioned speeches.

A military expert, he never wears a military uniform. He is hard-headed, practical, frugal. An organizer. A patriot. But also an egoist, with a desire for authority, with an intense, driving determination to see his ideas carried through.

Since August 4, 1936, when he directed the coup d'etat that gave Greece an authoritarian regime, there has been no disputing the position of General Metaxas in Greece.

KING IN BACKGROUND

He has the backing of a highly efficient secret police. Through King George, now definitely in the background, he has the support of the Greek Army.

There is no individual in Greek political life who could even begin to oppose him now.

Kondylis, Venizelos, Demerdjis, and Tsaldaris, the only men who might have helped the King maintain constitutional government, are figures of the past.

Having eliminated what he considered the obstructionist policies of democratic and parliamentary government, General Metaxas gives not the slightest sign of sponsoring any return to that form of government.

"For the time being," he has told the Greeks, "there is no question of new elections. . . . Those of you who have in the past belonged to parties are now under the obligation of forgetting them entirely."

IRON DISCIPLINE

Politically, Greece is under iron discipline, and there is a touch of German thoroughness about this. General Metaxas studied at the Berlin Military Academy. The last show of open opposition ended in February, 1938, when a number of party leaders were banished to the Greek islands, those pleasant, sunshiny little islands where politicians can plan and scheme—harmlessly.

General Metaxas is carrying out a wide program of social legislation, public works, and national discipline. There has been land reclamation, new roads, greater industrial activity, higher wages, and a better standard of living.

On the other hand, higher taxation and higher costs of living must be considered, while rearmament, social legislation, and a heavily increased police force have cut into national revenue.

As regards Greek foreign relations, General Metaxas has achieved notable successes. He set out to improve Greek-Turkish relations and succeeded. Through vigorous defense measures, Greece is in a much better position militarily. Relations with Italy are improving, and the British guarantee did much to soothe fears of the Greeks.

STRICT CENSORSHIP

There is an unusually strict censorship, and the stern hand of dictatorship is evident in many ways. How the Greeks, famous as a liberty-loving and highly politically minded people feel about it all, is difficult to appraise. Of late, it seems, there is an increased appreciation of the Metaxas argument that this is no time for political obstructionism.

General Metaxas was in the past regarded "pro-German." He has repudiated any such sympathies, pointing out that Greece, with Germany its most important market for tobacco, hardly can afford to ignore the Third Reich. There is no question but what Greek public opinion is warmly pro-British.

With the present war in Europe there are new problems for Greece, not least the threatening problems of national economy with the disruption of the German market and trade.

There are two things that impress the observer in Greece. One is the sympathy for the western powers and the faith of the Greeks, a maritime people, in the British Navy. The other is the contrasting economic dependence of Greece on Germany.

The Greek Government, under the stern guiding hand of Gen. John Metaxas, is committed to a policy of neutrality. Even the newspapers are required to give news from Germany and the western powers equal space.

Reliance on Britain springs not only from the British pledge of aid to this country but from Greece's geographical position. As a Mediterranean Nation, and a seafaring one, Greece has a natural concern over attack by water. The average Greek unhesitatingly ranks Britain first as a Mediterranean naval power.

SUSPICION OF ITALY

There is apprehension and suspicion of Italy despite improving relations between Athens and Rome, but the Greek shrugs his shoulders and says: "The British Navy would be here in a minute."

For a neighboring friend and ally, Greece has Turkey. To the military alliance between these two countries has been added the assurances of Article 2 of the Turkish-British-French Treaty which pledges Turkey to come to the assistance of Britain and France "in case of any aggressive activity . . . which would lead to war in an area of the Mediterranean . . . in which war Great Britain and France would be involved in virtue of the pledges they have given to Greece and Rumania."

THREAT TO EQUILIBRIUM

Chief threat to the internal equilibrium of the country is in the possible repercussions of a falling market in Germany for Greek tobacco and the breakdown in trade with the Reich. High prices paid by Germany under clearing arrangements have been instrumental in creating favorable labor conditions in the Macedonian tobacco growing area—formerly a source of labor troubles. A return to unemployment may bring new trouble.

There is, however, a counter-agent, increased purchases by Britain and France, and the firm hold which the Metaxas Regime has on the Nation.

Yusa Breaks Mark In Meet in Brazil

Domei Tsushin

RIO DE JANEIRO, March 2—Tetsuo Hamuro and Masanori Yusa, visiting Japanese swimming stars, swam off with top honors last night, when they won the 200-meter breaststroke and the 100-meter freestyle events, respectively, in an invitational meet held at the Fluminense Swimming Club, under the auspices of the Rio de Janeiro Swimming Federation.

Hamuro broke the Japanese record for the 200-meter breaststroke over the 25-meter pool, when he splashed to victory in 2 minutes 39.6 seconds.

Yusa, meanwhile, captured the 100-meter freestyle in the fast time of 57.9 seconds, falling short by .2 seconds in cracking the world's mark of 57.7 seconds set by another Japanese swimmer Shigeo Arai last year.

Weight-Lifting Marks By Nan Recognized

The amazing weight-lifting world records, which were established by Juitsu Nan on November 2, 1939 during the Meiji Shrine National Athletic Meet, were officially accepted on January 18 of this year by the International Amateur Weight-Lifting Federation in Paris, according to a letter addressed to Viscount M. Mishima, President of the Japan Amateur Weight Fifting Federation in Tokyo.

Nan, whose body weight was 60 kilograms, lifted 105 kilograms in the two hands military press and 102.5 kilograms in the two hands snatch.

CUNNINGHAM NAMED ON ALL-AMERICAN TRACK TEAM FOR 7TH STRAIGHT YEAR

By ARTHUR J. DALEY

N.Y. Times

NEW YORK—Unlike most All-America selectors who have to put one intangible on the scale and weigh it off against another, Daniel J. Ferris, secretary-treasurer of the A. A. U., can fall back on the unerring performance chart when he picks his annual all-America track and field team. Hence few criticisms ever are leveled at his selections.

Perhaps the most delicate problem that confronted the genial A. A. U. official in making up his 1939 team was in naming a man for the 1,500-meter run. Chuck Fenske won the Princeton Mile and Blaine Rideout won the national 1,500-meter championship, so that the mile or metric mile situation was more confusing than it has been in years.

Possibly from force of habit, but more probably because Glenn Cunningham dominated the indoor season, Mr. Ferris named the Old Master for the post, the seventh straight season of All-America ranking for Galloping Glenn.

SIXTH TIME FOR LASH

But there are two others of almost equal stature. Don Lash made the team for the sixth successive year and Joe McCluskey hit it for the ninth time. Shuffling Joe missed out in 1936 and hence his streak is not consecutive.

In all, there are fourteen repeaters from the 1938 nominations. Those to return to the lists are Clyde Jeffrey in the 100, Louis Gregory in the 10,000, the late Pat Dengis in the marathon, Allan Tolmich in the 65-meter hurdles, Fred Wolcott in the high and low hurdles, Otto Kotraba and John Rahkonen in the walks, Bill Lacefield in the broad jump, Cornelius Warmerdam in the pole vault, Joe Scott in the decathlon, Cunningham in the 1,500 Lash in the cross-country and McCluskey in the steeplechase.

The Ferris selections follow the pattern of the national A. A. U. championships in most instances. But there were six exceptions. Blaine Rideout scored a tremendous upset in the 1,500 at Lincoln when he caught the field asleep, built up a terrific lead and barely lasted to win. He gave way to Cunningham.

WOLCOTT IS OUTSTANDING

Another Lincoln victor was Joe Batiste, Negro schoolboy from Tucson, Ariz. Wolcott, the odds-on favorite, was so sure of victory in the 110-meter hurdles that he went out for a world record, overpressed and hit a barrier. So Batiste edged him out for the crown. But the Rice timber-topper was easily the greatest hurdler in competition last year and was given two places, at 110 and 200 meters.

In four field events Ferris went more by consistency over the season and on performance than on what was done in the nationals. Hence he picked Warmerdam over George Varoff in the pole vault; Elmer Hackney over Lilburn Williams in the shot; John McLaughry over Chet Cruickshank in the hammer and Bob Peoples over Boyd Brown in the javelin.

One spot, however, where Ferris was not swayed by a record was in the 800 meters. John Borican had established a new indoor mark at Dartmouth, but Charlie Beetham took the national crown with one of his sizzling finishes. Borican failed miserably outdoors after a banner year on boards, but managed to hold on to the spot at 1,000 meters.

The teams follow:

Garcia and Armstrong Fight to a Draw

Domei Tsushin

LOS ANGELES, March 2—The Filipino middleweight champion of the world, Ceferino Garcia, and the colored challenger, Henry Armstrong, battled to a draw here last night in a sanguinary 10-round encounter which many sports writers agreed was one of the most fiercely contested bouts in the annals of the ring.

The decision knocked the bottom out of Armstrong's cherished dream of winning his fourth boxing title. Formerly he has held the world feather-weight and lightweight championships and at present he is possessor of the crown in the welterweight division.

Garcia weighed in at 153.5 pounds last night while Armstrong tipped the scales at 142.

Oregon to Meet U. S. C. Cagers for Conference Title

Domei Tsushin

SEATTLE, March 2—Oregon State University beat Washington University last night 46 to 31 to win the basketball championship in the northern division of the Pacific Coast Conference and thus became entitled to meet the winners of the southern division, the University of Southern California, for the conference title.

Oregon State led by a single point at the end of the first half, 19-18, and in the next frame scored 27 points against the Huskies' 13 to win by a margin of 15 points.

U. S. C. met Stanford University last Saturday in Los Angeles and won by a score of 39-32. The half-time scores were U. S. C. 22, Stanford 16, and U. S. C. 17, Stanford 16.

Tax Sends N.Y. Stock Deals to Other Centers

Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK—The New York Stock Exchange reported there was "a definite shift of securities business away from New York" to Boston, Chicago and other cities.

Blaming the New York State transfer taxes on share transactions on part for Wall Street's loss of business, the exchange said it would push efforts in this session of the State Legislature for lowering of the transfer taxes to meet the competition.

The exchange criticized the tax at length in its monthly publication, "The Exchange," and presented figures purporting to show relative growth of dealings on other exchanges."

Particularly affected, it explained, have been transactions in so-called "odd lots," that is transactions in less than the standard 100 shares. Odd-lot trade, it said, was influenced by "double taxation" in New York State.

The Legislature, it was pointed out, voted in 1938 to eliminate the double transfer tax on odd-lot transactions, but Governor Lehman failed to sign the bill.

The exchange said the trend to other cities "portends a permanent decline" for the New York market if the situation is allowed to continue.

It noted 75 per cent of the orders executed for the public on the exchange come from investors outside the State.

"In 1917," it continued, "trading on the Boston Stock Exchange in stocks listed also on the New York Stock Exchange amounted to 64.9 per cent of the Boston volume.

"By the end of 1938, this figure had increased to 78.5 per cent.

"While in 1937, the Chicago Stock Exchange did 14.5 per cent of its total trading volume in New York listed stocks, by June, 1939, this had increased to 48.7 per cent."

It cited similar trends for dealings in Cleveland, Detroit, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and San Francisco.

HAWAII NISEI BALL TEAM COMING HERE

The Asahi baseball team of Honolulu, comprised of American citizens of Japanese ancestry and one of the strongest in Hawaii, will compete in the Far Eastern Games to be held early in June in Tokyo by the Japan Amateur Athletic Federation in celebration of the 2,600th anniversary of the founding of the Empire.

Willingness of the Asahi team to come to Japan was stated in a cable received by the Federation the other day. The same team had been negotiating with the Waseda University authorities for an invitation to this country during this year. It is recalled in this connection that the Asahi aggregation has been instrumental in the past for trips of Waseda, Meiji, Keio, Hosei and Rikkyo baseball teams to Hawaii.

Tentative plans call for the departure of the Asahi team from Honolulu on the Asama Maru on May 9 with arrival at Yokohama on May 18.

The Asahi team has won the championship of the Hawaii Baseball league on a number of occasions and is always a strong contender for the gonfalon. It will be interesting to see how the type of baseball it plays will measure up against the fast collegiate brand of the game in this country.

The Federation announced Monday that negotiations had been completed with the Philippine Amateur Athletic Federation for dispatch of a soccer team to the Far Eastern Games. Tentative plans call for the team's departure from Manila on the Kamo Maru on May 18, arriving at Kobe on May 29.

Riggs Wins National Indoor Tennis Title

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, March 3—Robert L. Riggs, America's No. 1 seeded player, today defeated Donald McNeil, nationally seeded No. 3 star, by scores of 3-6, 6-1, 6-4, 2-6 and 6-2, to capture the singles title of the national indoor championships concluded here.

Miss Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, American Wightman Cup player, won the women's indoor title, when she downed Miss Pauline Betz by scores of 6-4, 1-6 and 7-5.

Riggs pairing with Elwood Cooke then scored a three-set victory over Clifford Sutter and Ernie Sutter to win the indoor doubles title. The Riggs-Cooke combination won by the scores of 6-3, 6-4 and 6-4.

The women's doubles title was won by Miss Taubele and Miss Wheeler when they defeated Miss Raymond and Miss Cumming, winning by score of 7-5, 6-4.

In the mixed doubles, Riggs and Miss Betz defeated Cooke and Miss Fabyan, 6-2 and 6-3, to win the mixed-doubles title.

3 Japanese Correspondents To Visit RAF Headquarters

Domei Tsushin

LONDON, March 3—Three Japanese correspondents, representing the Domei News Agency, the Asahi and the Nichi-Nichi newspapers of Tokyo, will leave at 10 a.m. tomorrow by plane with 11 other foreign newspapermen to visit the Royal Air Force facilities on the Western Front, it was disclosed here today.

During the tour which is expected to take from five to six days, the correspondents will be shown various activities of the "advance air striking force," and also will be received by High British Air Force officials.

ONE THAT DISPLEASED THE CHAMP

The photo shows Arturo Godoy, of Chile, as he pasted Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis with a stinging left to the face during their battle at Madison Square Garden in New York on February 9. Joe managed to take the decision over a 15-round route to retain his championship, but Arturo's crouching, crowding style gave him plenty of trouble.

JOE LOUIS WINS, KEEPS TITLE BUT GODOY BECOMES A HERO

By JAMES P. DAWSON

N.Y. Times

NEW YORK, Feb. 10—Joe Louis left the ring at Madison Square Garden last night still the world heavyweight champion after fifteen slashing rounds with Arturo Godoy, stout-hearted challenger from Chile. But his invincibility was less pronounced, his crown stood less securely on his head and he tasted for the first time the bitter sting of jeering vocal salvos by a fight crowd that disputed the verdict.

On a two-to-one decision the Brown Bomber, who didn't get much chance to drop his depth charges through fifteen rounds of fighting at a burning pace, won the decision that retained his title for him.

He had hammered the iron-jawed Godoy through ten of the fifteen rounds, to the complete satisfaction of most of the ringside experts and many of the onlookers who can appraise a punch and measure the progress of a fight.

LOUIS BOOED

But when the decision was announced the Garden echoed such a din as has not greeted a heavyweight champion since that July day back in 1921 when Jack Dempsey, standing to acknowledge his introduction for a battle against Georges Carpentier, was drowned in abuse from boxing's first million-dollar gathering.

Louis failed to knock out Godoy. He failed even to knock down the man whose boast it is that he has never been knocked off his feet. What is more, the Brown Bomber, who was making the ninth defense of the crown he won in 1937 and was seeking his eighth straight knockout, was anything but impressive.

On the other hand, Godoy caught the fancy of the crowd. He rushed and ripped and tore at Louis with a furious, reckless attack that was not always prudent but was altogether effective from the standpoint of his wellbeing, and it appealed to the onlookers.

There were 15,657 fans in the gathering and they paid $88,523 to the gross gate, more or less expecting to see Louis in another exhibition of the tremendous hitting power that carried him in less than six years from the laborer's line in a Ford plant at Detroit to fame and fortune.

They were disappointed in Louis and charmed, if not thrilled, by the gallant stand of Godoy, so that when the decision in Louis's favor was announced, a verdict that was eminently fair from any competitive angle, there came a storm of jeers and boos and catcalls from all sections of the arena, an outburst that made the Garden vibrate.

The surprise of this outburst was as nothing compared to the shock of the verdict itself. Two of the bout officials voted for Louis, ten rounds to four, with one even. They were Referee Arthur Donovan and one of the judges, George Lecron. The other judge, Tommy Shortell, an experienced official, who goes back to the old days in his association with boxing, voted for Godoy ten rounds to two, with three even.

On the writer's score sheet, Louis won by ten rounds to five, a margin that generally reflects the consensus of ringside critics. Godoy, thundering in, piling Louis up on the ropes, lambasting the champion and making futile and at times ridiculous the desperate efforts of Louis to land a crushing blow, won the third, fourth and fifth rounds with courageous fighting and carried the eighth and ninth as well.

But Louis won all the other rounds as the battle was viewed from this corner—even if he did not cloak himself with brilliance. The champion landed oftener and palpably harder. He was more accurate and was superior as a ring general without being letter-perfect.

NO LONGER INVINCIBLE

Still, Louis did not rock Godoy to sleep with the lullaby of his left or right, and his prestige suffered. No longer can the argument be advanced that Louis is invincible, a superman. He is just human, a fighter who encounters difficulties when he faces a crouching foe, and he has not—doubtless never will—develop a solution for this style.

In a battle that will be remembered chiefly for this fact, the champion's weakness was glaringly revealed. Max Schmeling exposed the Bomber's weakness to a right-hand punch and profited thereby. Two-Ton Tony Galento last June revealed the difficulty Louis has with opponents who fight from a crouch.

And last night Godoy, the fearless ring gladiator who was contemptuous of the heavyweight champion everybody was beginning to acclaim as the ring's superman, played on this weakness.

So much so that Godoy, though defeated, became a hero. He was beaten but not disgraced. In his dressing room after the fight it was seen his eyes were badly swollen and he had a cut under his left eye and bruised, bleeding lips.

VIRTUAL ADMISSION OF DEFEAT

Gallantly Godoy refrained from criticizing the decision, submitting only that he thought he was entitled at least to a draw. That amounts almost to an admission of defeat. He felt Louis's punches and knew their effect.

Louis was unmarked, but he was sadly disappointed. He declared it was "the most worsest fight I had since I fought Bob Pastor," without attempting to explain it. When informed one of the judges had voted for Godoy the weary champion said, "I'm sure glad they have three officials in bouts here."

This was not at all a sensational or spectacular battle. Louis entered the ring a prohibitive favorite to win. Odds of 1 to 4 were offered he would knock out Godoy. Even money was bet Louis would stop his foe in four rounds.

With such unanimity of expectations, it was little wonder the crowd thrilled to the spectacle of a challenger befuddling the perfect champion, the invincible fighter that Louis was thought to be in the weight of these tremendous odds.

LIKE A BARROOM BRAWL

To the surprising need for a decision, therefore, can be ascribed the thunderous roar of disapproval. It is up to Louis to explain and erase from memory a sloppy, inept effort in a struggle that was, in the final analysis, little more than a barroom brawl.

Godoy rushed and Louis's boxing finesse was wrecked. Godoy plunged recklessly and Louis's punch was a futile gesture. Godoy crouched—at one time, in the fourteenth round he actually touched his gloved finger tips to the ring floor—and Louis was at a loss for what to do, unless Godoy became careless.

Indeed, Godoy planted a resounding kiss on Louis's left cheek during a mix-up in the fourteenth round, and after the battle and the announcement of the decision the Chilean insisted on kissing Louis again until the champion finally was dragged away.

It was that kind of fight. Everything happened to Louis, everything to make him look embarrassed, if not altogether ridiculous.

Encouraged by the crowd's disapproval of the award, Promoter Mike Jacobs stated that he probably would give Godoy a return bout with Louis in September, providing Louis was still champion. The Brown Bomber first must defend his laurels, or what is left of them, against Johnny Paycheck of Des Moines in a bout here proposed for April 3, and against Lee Savold, another Iowan, in June, if the latter wins his March 1 bout with Pastor.

Judging by last night's bout, if one of these fighters adopts Godoy's crouching style and can hit harder than the South American, Louis's reign may well be in jeopardy. If Godoy had hit with the power of a Galento, he might have bagged the title.

Louis won sloppily against a bruising, mauling, rushing fighter who knew no fear or retreat. Indeed, in the fourth, seventh and eighth rounds, Godoy was so eager for action he fought after the bell.

For two rounds Louis sparred cautiously, bewildered by Godoy's crouch, and taking no chances. The champion pawed with his left, in a straight jab mostly, and managed to bring blood from Godoy's nose in the second.

CHAMPION PINNED TO ROPES

In the third, fourth and fifth rounds, however, Louis was swept before the fury of a surprising, bewildering attack for which he had no counter. Godoy rushed the champion to the ropes pinned him there and, notwithstanding the Bomber's frantic efforts to drop his foe with right-hand uppercuts and savage short left hooks, plied Louis with a fusillade of blows without direction, but from all angles.

The crowd thrilled to this exhibition of courage and reveled in the discomfiture of Louis. Louis often missed desperate punches at long range through these three rounds. It made no difference that Godoy also missed. Nobody expected him to land.

In the seventh round Louis straightened up his foe with a right-hand uppercut. Godoy's legs shook and he seemed tired and stung. A right to the jaw slowed down Godoy in the eigth but it had only temporary effect. The Chilean came on to outwrestle and outrough Louis in this chapter and in the ninth as well.

Thereafter, though Godoy's rushes did not diminsh, Louis's greeting with punches was sharper and keener. He met most of the charges with powerful right uppercuts through the tenth, eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth rounds and hammered Godoy pitilessly with short lefts and rights to the chin, face and head in the clinches.

REFEREE CAUTIONS GODOY

In the fourteenth Godoy revived and, with an exhibition of backpedaling, had Louis a little dizzy trying to follow the pace. At one stage Referee Donovan warned Godoy not to make a runaway fight of it, and Arturo's deply was a motion that said as plainly as words, "Make Louis fight." Louis couldn't.

It was shortly after this Godoy planted a kiss on Louis's cheek. And in the fifteenth, when the tired Godoy sought to hustle Louis along, the champion met each rush with well-timed, accurate, short blows without in the least affecting Godoy's determination.

Louis weighed 203 pounds and Godoy 202.

AUSTRALIA GIVES BOUNTIES FOR SHIPBUILDING

Program for Self-Sufficiency In Industry; Amounts Up To £50,000 Year Are Offered

Christian Science Monitor

CANBERRA, Australia—A program aiming at self-sufficiency in shipbuilding for Australia was launched here recently with an announcement by the Government that it would offer bounties up to £50,000 a year on Australia-built vessels between the tonnages of 100 and 1,500 gross register.

Declaring that Australia should make more ships with its own workmen and with its own materials, Prime Minister Robert G. Menzies pointed to the rapid development of Australia as a Pacific nation, depending on ships for its commerce and for its first line of defense.

To expedite this change, Mr. Menzies said that recommendations of the Tariff Board had been adopted, calling for payment of a bounty on iron and steel vessels (other than war vessels) of more than 100 tons but not exceeding 1,500 tons. The rate of bounty is to be £11 10s. a ton on vessels of more than 100 tons but not exceeding 750 tons, the rate thereafter to be gradually reduced so that on vessels of 1,500 tons it is £10 a ton. Bounty payments are to be limited to £50,000 a year, he said, and machinery, boilers, and auxiliaries required for vessels are to be eligible for such bounty to be admitted free of duty from the United Kingdom and at 15 per cent from foreign sources. The duties on vessels of the type mentioned is to be fixed at free in the British preferential tariff and at 15 per cent in the general tariff.

Under the tariff protection existing before the bounty was introduced, duties applied to vessels up to 500 tons gross register. The net rate of duty were 42½ per cent British and 80 per cent foreign. Those duties did not succeed in establishing the shipbuilding industry and few vessels within the duty range were built in Australia in recent years. It is a long time since any commercial vessels exceedinf 500 tons have been built in Australia.

The announcement of the bounty has been welcomed by shipbuilders, who see the plan as coming at an opportune time. Without a large volume of new work, shipping experts declare that the industry would have faced a serious crisis about the middle of next year. The subsidies should enable Australian firms to tender successfully for several vessels a year they claim.

ITAMI NAMED MANAGER OF WASEDA NINE

Yasuhiro Itami, catcher of the Waseda University baseball team between 1926 and 1930, has been appointed manager of his alma mater team, succeeding Katsuo Tanaka, according to announcement Tuesday.

Mr. Itami, an employe of the Teikoku Life Insurance Company, has been one of the umpires of the Tokyo Six University Baseball league since 1931.

Interviewed by the press Tuesday, Mr. Itami said he had been requested by the baseball division of the university as well as the Tomon Club, composed of former Waseda university athletes, to quit his position at the life insurance company and devote his full time to managing the ball team, but circumstances will not permit this. As to training methods of the team, he said he had his own plans but would make no announcement until he had consulted the school authorities concerned.

Mr. Tanaka was appointed manager in 1937 when the institution revived the manager system after going without one since 1933. He a good record, piloting the team to a championship during the spring season in 1939. Family circumstances have made it necessary for him to resign, it is said.

At a meeting of the league Tuesday night, it was indicated that the spring season would start on the second Saturday in April, or the 13th.

prompt answer which he has not yet received. He then declared that during his 20 years' practice as claim's lawyer, he has never met with such secretiveness and taciturnity on the part of a foreign government. He believes that during the course of the legal proceedings, many big revelations will be made.

NEW FRONTIER DEMARKED

MOSCOW, March 4—The demarkation of a new frontier between Soviet Russia and Germany was concluded on February 29, according to a statement issued here today. Along the 1,500-kilometer frontier 2,820 guard houses have been erected.

CONDUCTOR DIES

BERLIN, March 4—The famous German conductor Dr. Karl Muck died today in Stuttgart at the age of 80, according to word received here today.

Dr. Muck was one of the greatest Wagnerian conductors. Between 1901 and 1930, he has conducted at Bayreuth where his interpretation of Parsifal aroused widespread interest. From 1892 to 1912, the late Dr. Much was at the Berlin Opera House.

TO RESUME TALKS

BUDAPEST, March 4—Negotiations between Soviet Russia and Turkey which had been interrupted sometime ago will again be resumed, according to a report received here today from Ankara and which appeared in the Uj Nemzedek. The paper affirms that the Soviet Ambassador in Ankara recently called on Foreign Minister Sukru Saracoglu and expressed the desire of the Soviet Government to resume negotiations.

STRIKE IN BOMBAY

AMSTERDAM, March 3—According to a report recevied here today from London, over 150,000 textile workers in Bombay are said to be striking. The direct cause of strike is said to be the demand for a 15 per cent increase in wages. But the numerous posters and leaflets that have been spread around indicate that the strike also expresses the dissatisfaction of the Indians against the despotic rule of the British in India.

their bases safely, the Air Ministry stated. Last night another Royal Air Force bomber command patrolled the heavily fortified bases of Sylt and other islands in the Heligoland Bight. They encountered terrific gunfire from ground batteries.

DENIED BY BERLIN

BERLIN, March 4—The German public have been told over the wireless and in the newspapers that no flights have been made over Berlin by enemy aircraft.

BRITISH LINER ATTACKED

LONDON, March 4—The British liner Domala (8,441 tons) is now at an anchorage in a British port after having been attacked by a Heinkel bomber and machine-gunned in the English Channel in the early hours of Saturday morning, the Admiralty announced today. The quartermaster of the Domala stated that the German plane flew over the ship with full navigation lights, dived until it was within 40 feet of the deck and dropped a bomb which struck the ship. The second bomb struck the bridge and killed the captain. The plane made off as soon as the defense guns on the British vessel were manned, but returned to machinegun men in the small lifeboats and hanging on to rafts. The rough weather made rescue work difficult. There were 143 British Indian subjects on board who had just been released by the German Government and were being repatriated. Of these 88 are missing and are feared to be dead. Rescue work was done by various ships including a Dutch vessel which managed to save the majority of the crew.

The sinking of the Swedish vessel Lagaholm (2,818 tons) was disclosed today. Members of her crew were taken to a Scottish port.

CITY NOT YET TAKEN

Helsinki, March 4—Finnish authorities have stated that Viborg has not yet fallen, but the Finns are evidently preparing to make their main stand behind the city. Unofficial reports say that the new lines are three miles behind the city of Viborg, but the advancing Russians have not contacted these positions at any point. Finnish sources have been denying that the Russians have penetrated into Viborg proper, but the best obtainable estimation of the position would appear to be that the city itself is now a fiercely contested battlefield. Parachute troops are believed to have been dropped north of Viborg and east and west behind the Finnish Lines, but so far this strategy has proved unsuccessful.

The defense of Viborg has been costly. Some neutral estimates put the losses of the defenders as high as 17,000. One reason for this high figure has been the necessity of holding some points of the line at all costs while new concrete defences have been prepared.

Heavy fighting is reported on all other fronts, including the far north and Kumo Sectors. The Finnish High Command have announced a fresh victory north of Lake Ladoga, in which one thousand Russians were slain.

There are many rumors of peace negotiations after the fall of Viborg but the authorities think it unlikely that Stalin would propose acceptable terms. Authoritative quarters said that Finland is prepared to continue the unequal struggle to the last man and the nation retains confidence in the Army and the Commander in Chief, Field-Marshal Mannerheim.

HOOVER IN APPEAL

NEW YORK, March 4—Herbert Hoover appealed today for another $1,000,000 for the Finnish relief fund. New emergencies are arising for the civilian population day, it is stated, and the fund is in need of continuous support to serve these humanitarian purposes.

Yokohama Prepares For Interport Games

Special to The Japan Times

YOKOHAMA, March 5—Yokohama is in full training for three big Interport athletic contests against Kobe on the weekend of March 18. The port's soccer team will travel to Kobe, and the Kobe rugger and hockey forces will move down this way in battle and social formation. While teams are now being carefully picked, the entertainment end is being well provided for. From the base at the Y.C. & A.C. the usual and some unusual hospitable festivities are being arranged.

ALLIED LOANS TO TURKEY HIT $340,000,000

Turkey's 'Price' for Keeping Strategic Dardanelles Open Includes Great Loans, Credits

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON—Turkey's "price" for keeping the strategic Dardanelles open to British and French warships and for friendly co-operation in the Near East ws reported in authoritative circles to have been a minimum of $340,000,000 in loans and credits.

In addition to Anglo-French loans to Turkey totaling approximately $174,000,000, which have been announced in London and Paris, information received here from those capitals and Ankara is that the Allies have made other financial and economic commitments including:

A £15,000,000 loan ($60,000,000 at present rates) earmarked for stabilization of Turkish currency.

A £16,000,000 loan of which £6,000,000 (valued at $30,000,000 at exchange rates existing then) was for arms and ammunition, and £10,000,000 ($50,000,000) for development of Turkish mineral resources.

A £3,000,000 loan ($15,000,000 at the current rate) for construction of the Karabuk steel mill, the first and only steel producing plant in the Near East, which has just started production, including the manufacture of armaments.

A £2,000,000 loan ($10,000,000 at the then-current rate) for release of blocked exchange.

PURCHASE TURKISH GOODS

Commitments to use principal and interest payments made on the loans by Turkey to purchase large quantities of Turkish tobacco, fruit, nuts and minerals, comprising Turkey's major exports which previously went to Germany.

Turkey, because of its guardianship of the Dardanelles gateway to the Russian-controlled Black Sea and its keystone position in the Moslem Near East, was wooed by both Germany and the Allies at the outbreak of the war in Europe.

On Oct. 19, 1939, it signed a 15-year mutual assistance pact with Great Britain and France, designed to preserve to present terrritorial and political status in the Eastern Mediterranean and Balkans.

TURKEY AND RUSSIA

Turkey specified that it would take no action which would bring itself into conflict with Soviet Russia. But at the same time Turkey refused to sign a Soviet-inspired pact which, according to the most reliable information available, would have forbidden passage of the Dardanelles by Allied warships and thereby insured Russia against attack through the Black Sea or interference with Russian transport of war materials to Germany via Rumania.

In addition to the Anglo-French loans and credits, foreign affairs analysts believe Turkey's decision was influenced by:

1. A growing concern lest Soviet Russia return to Czarist Empire expansion polices with its eye on the Dardanelles. Turkey decided that, under existing circumstances, it would receive help in defending the Straits from the Allies, but would get no assistance from Germany.

2. The fact that Germany was unable to purchase and transport Turkish commodities because of the British blockade.

3. Strictly military considerations, including the fact that Germany had no common border with Turkey whereas the British and French could attack it by sea or through Syria and Iraq.

U.S. DEMOCRATS 'SWEEP' ELECTION IN INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON—The Democratic Party has just recaptured the American presidency of the Interparliamentary Union from Representative Hamilton Fish (R) of New York, Mr. Fish is still chuckling over the coup he put over last year but the Democrats do not mind very much for they are now in control.

Last year when it came time to elect the President many Democrats regarded the affair as perfunctory and did not show up. Mr. Fish had an idea that would happen and had a large group of his followers on hand. When the time came to vote, instead of picking a representative of the majority party the minority proudly carried the day, and named Mr. Fish. The result was that the Republican headed the four Senators and over 20 Representatives who made up the delegation to Oslo, and Mr. Fish had an agreeable time as American Chairman, making various speeches over Europe, and giving advice on various European problems.

DEMOCRATS ON HAND

This wasn't repeated this week. The Democrats were on hand and not caught napping a second time. They turned out in good force at the election this week where each Congressman has one vote and put in Alben W. Barkley (D) of Kentucky, Majority Leader of the Senate, as President. But Mr. Fish had a good time too. Seeing the handwriting on the wall he declined to accept further honors from the Union, and in stepping out, unloosed a final attack on Mr. Roosevelt's "internationalism."

Democrats did not seem to mind Mr. Fish's activity very much in any case. It isn't expected that there will be much of a free trip abroad this year, anyway, what with the war situation and all. Congress ordinarily appropriates $20,000 for the Union, half of it going to support the officers at Geneva, and half to defray expenses of the annual junket abroad.

ESTABLISHED IN 1899

The organization was established in Paris in 1899 and since then the United States has always had an official or unofficial representative. The four Senators who got to Oslo last summer were not widely associated with foreign affairs; they were Rush D. Holt (D) of West Virginia, Alexander Wiley (D) of Wisconsin, Theodore F. Green (D) of Rhode Island, and Lynn J. Frazier (R) of North Dakota. Of these only Senator Green, who paid his own way, is on the Foreign Relations Committee. The American section of the Union has a veteran Executive Secretary here, Arthur Deerin Call, who has held office for 20 years. In 1933, at Madrid, he was the sole American representative.

In 1925 the conference met in Washington with 44 Nations present. The conference is a forum for international discussion and helped pave the way for The Hague Conferences and Court of International Arbitration.

winners of this race were Mr. Scaloun and partner, second and third prizes going to Miss L. Ibata and partner and Miss K. Yoshimura and partner.

A balloon relay race was to have been held to conclude the program but due to lack of time this event had to be canceled. After a short time of free skating for the members the evening closed with the presentation of prizes.

Among others who attended the party were Carl Boehringer, of the American Embassy; Mr. and Mrs. James A. Rabbitt, Miss Dorothy Heathcote, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Turner, John J. Reifsnider, Count M. Terashima and Mrs. Scaloun.

NEW LENS EYES DEPTHS OF SEA

Camera in Diving Bell Reveals Underwater Doings; Synthetic Europe Proposed

By HERBERT B. NICHOLS
Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK—Making the task of the underwater photographer easier is a novel "photosphere," designed by J. E. Williamson, lecturer and explorer, who sought ease and comfort for his subterranean observations. A huge metal diving bell is lowered through a well on a surface barge, by means of an accordion-like connecting pipe, the photosphere's air vent, entrance and exit. Within the body of the photosphere, Mr. Williamson sets up his camera equipment for photographing in color the extraordinary undersea flora and fauna of the Bahamas.

LABORATORY POSTWAR PLAN

It is apparent that the British natural scientist, Dr. Julian Huxley, planning a "post-war" Europe and a "Council of Nations," has in his test tube all the ingredients for a vigorous reaction. Adding the catalyst of fervent desire for collective peace, a useful synthesis is assured; but without this element, the only result one can predict with certainty is a precipitate of continued inharmony.

This initial outline is natural science's 1940 answer to the request for a workable scheme. It is not complete; for if it were, it would hardly work for long. Research methods postulate that where there are many variables, no hard and fast rules can be laid down in advance. Hence the wisdom of organization in social science that recognizes the inevitableness of social changes.

To work, a Council of European Nations (visualized as minus Soviet Russia) should include provision for proper enforcement authority and a liberal budget, Dr. Huxley told the American Association for the Advancement of Science. It would be necesarry for all the nations to give up a certain amount of sovereignty for the good of the whole, but a full-fledged federal system like that of the United States would be hopeless to attempt at one bound. Nationalism would not vanish, but could be relegated to the cultural sphere.

That natural science had its inception and growth in conjunction with the rise of freedom and democracy, every researcher is aware. Hence it is not surprising that the first proposal of British and American scientific bodies cooperating in the search for a solution that will not explode, should advise the choice of international democracy as the first step to be taken.

DATE CROP VIEWED AHEAD

People in the Big Rock-Candy Mountains may not yet have learned how to harvest confections from trees, but in certain sunkissed valleys of California and Arizona where sand and sun vie for top honors, "orchardists" make their living from candy that grows on trees.

Thirty years ago you wouldn't trade a fig for all the dates in the United States that were grown here, but today the date palm agriculturists, according to C. K. Priest in Nation's Business, looks forward to a time when practically all of the 70,000,000 pounds of dates consumed in this country will be home grown. There are nearly enough trees already, but date palms are only in their prime after the first 100 years.

The date is nature's candy. Being about 75 per cent sugar, it is really preserved in its own sugar. It's one fruit Californians don't worry about when frosts come. But while freezing doesn't harm it, severe rains in the harvest season will. Dates don't ripen all at once the way a bunch of Concord grapes does. Pickers go over each bunch about 25 times during the harvesting season, removing the ripe ones. To keep off moisture that would cause the thin skin of the ripening dates to break and the contents to mold, paper and cellophane "raincoats" are worn from mid-summer until the final gleaning.

SKY EXPLOSION TRACED

Observations of a star formation known to astronomers as the Crab Nebula in Taurus may have cleared up a 1,000-year-old mystery of the heavens it is reported in Nature. In 1054 A. D., Chinese and Japanese annals record a bright object as having been seen for six months, its brightness equalling that of Jupiter. But until recently, no one had been able to determine what the Oriental star-gazers had seen.

Now, astronomers have discovered evidence that the Crab Nebula, which was first recorded by John Bevis, an English physician, in 1731, originated from the explosion of a super-nova. Measurements of the velocity of expansion of the nebula have enabled them to fix the epoch of the outburst at about 1100 A. D., at which time it is known on the basis of mathematical calculations the Crab Nebula was near the position of the right object recorded by the Chinese and Japanese. The Oriental comparison with Jupiter's brightness also indicates that the nova which burst was at least 10 times as bright as the ordinary star or nova. Therefore, it would seem, that what the early astronomers saw was the birth of the present Crab Nebula.

Nurmi, Maki Show In Finnish Relief Meet

Domei Tsushin

SAN FRANCISCO, March 6—Paavo Nurmi world famous Finnish runner, and Taisto Maki, holder of the 5,000-meter world's record, last night took leading roles in the track and field carnival at the Civic Auditorium, which was held to raise funds for Finnish relief.

The widely-publicized meet was supported by a galaxy of track and field stars from the Olympic Club and the universities of Stanford, California and Southern California.

The fleet Finnish runner Maki, participating in the three-mile event, won by a wide margin in the fast time of 14 minutes 15.3 seconds. Nurmi, meanwhile, received a tremendous ovation from the crowd on the termination of his special exhibition race.

The two Finnish athletes, who arrived at New York early last month, are scheduled to appear in other exhibition races for Finnish relief in principal cities throughout the United States.

LONDON CAMPS SEEN READY FOR CHILDREN

Six New Government Units Are Held Up by County Council; Teachers Hesitate

FROM OUR EDUCATION CORRESPONDENT
The Times, London

LONDON—Hesitation by the London County Council seems at the moment to be holding up occupation of six new Government evacuation camps which are now completely ready to receive children.

Although the plans were seen and approved early last year by representatives of the Council, and although a classroom block has been added to each camp built since the first, there is a tendency to complain that the camps are not equipped as residential schools.

DIFFICULTIES ARISE

This they were never intended to be, and some of the difficulties seem to arise from the reluctance of teachers to take on the duties which are involved in running a camp as distinct from teaching. The L.C.C. Education Committee has always attached great importance to the views of its teachers.

There is likely to be a growing demand for the use of these camps. Householders living in areas where they are being built naturally ask why children should not be taken there from billets. Secondary school teachers' associations, at their meetings recently, have been urging that hostels and camps should be substituted for private billeting. Last, but not least the cost of billeting must cause some concern. Since the outbreak of war it has cost the Government £6,800,000; every week £300,000 is being made available to the Post Office by the Ministry of Health for the payment of allowances. These figures do not include expenditure on transport, rebilleting, and compensation for expenses.

Remarkable progress has been made recently with the camps. By heating, electric lighting, drainage, April 1 they should be all completed. Owing to increased costs the total number will be not 50 but 31, with five in Scotland; on the latter there has been little progress. One camp in the Chilterns has already been in use for a month by 200 physically defective children, and that occupied at the Government's insistence by the Bank of England at Overton, in Hants, is being vacated shortly. The other six are ready at Tilford and Cranleigh in Surrey, at Whitegate in Cheshire, at Mold in Flintshire, and two in the Oxfordshire Chilterns. Camps in Staffordshire and at Hexham would have been ready if the weather had not stopped the final stages of work.

The eight camps which are ready are also fully staffed. Twenty-two highly qualified managers have been appointed by the Camps Corporation some of them former leaders of Ministry of Labor Instructional Centers, and others officials of holiday camp organization. Central and building make them entirely suitable for winter occupation, and there seems no doubt that enterprising teachers could make light of the difficulties which have been foreseen by London critics. Conditions in many billets have been far less favorable for normal education.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - by Ripley

MINISTRY PLANS TO PRECLUDE CHARCOAL SHORTAGE NEXT WINTER

In order to preclude another charcoal famine next winter, the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry plans to make an appropriation of ¥3,500,000 to secure 850,000,000 kwan (one kwan equals 3.75 kilograms) of charcoal in the 1940-41 fiscal year.

The 1939-40 fiscal year's charcoal output is estimated at about 650,000,000 kwan. For the increase of 200,000,000 kwan the authorities plan to offer a bonus of one sen per kwan.

They will also offer a subsidy of ¥610,000 for improving charcoal-burning furnaces. One fourth of the money needed to modernize an old furnace will be paid by the Government.

For improving means of transporting charcoal a subsidy of ¥105,000 will be given. For charcoal-burning in snowy districts, the Government will provide ¥140,000 for snow-shed, snowploughs and other facilities.

The Government will also encourage joint purchase of charcoal wood. Those who buy wood with borrowed money will be given financial aid, the Government paying one half of the interest on the borrowed money.

Three thousand experts sent by the Government will teach proper methods to cut charcoal wood in all charcoal-producing districts.

Manei Plans

Section of the Manei, which produced 10 such films last year, is planning to produce five such pictures, including three ordered either by the Central Government or by special companies, every month, or a total of 60 a year.

This year the above section will pay chief attention to the production of the picture entitled "A Review of Manchoukuo Motion Pictures." Pictures aiming at presenting actual conditions in the new State to people abroad, educating the Manchurian masses, and at enabling the public to have a better appreciation of Manchoukuo's national policy will be produced every month, whenever necessary.

Upon the establishment of the Japan Motion Picture distribution system in that counry, the Manei will plan to export many cultural films to the Island Empire and accelerate the interchange of cultural fields between Japan and Manchoukuo.

Soviet Resolved

Chungking against an enemy was the China Affair mentioned but even then no mention was made of Japan.

"But it seems to me that Soviet aid to Chungking will continue indefinitely because she has always prided herself as a protector of the weak. After her action in Poland and Finland, China is the only country left with which she can reassure her people of maintaining her past policy."

Mr. Kashin then spoke of the internal conditions in Soviet Russia since the outbreak of the European War. According to Mr. Kashin, food is plentiful but that the shortages which are reported are due to poor distribution. Butter and bread are plentiful and reasonably cheap.

GOOD FAIRLY CHEAP

All staple foods are fairly cheap according to Mr. Kashin. But in February, he said that prices advanced 30 per cent but that the rise was unofficial.

The only surplus enjoyed by Soviet Russia was that of wheat and oil. Mr. Kashin reported that Soviet Russia had an agreement to send one million tons of wheat to Germany as well as oil.

After spending several weeks in Japan, Mr. Kashin and his family will return to New York.

Dual Skiing Meet Slated

The third annual dual skiing meet between Waseda and Keio universities will be held on March 19, 20 and 21 at the Nozawa hotspring resort in Nagano prefecture, according to announcement Wednesday.

TOKUNAGA HOLDS GEN TO DRAW

Umio Gen, handsome Korean scrapper who last year fresh upon his return from the Pacific coast of the United States became the country's boxing sensation by decisioning Piston Horiguchi, was a bitter disappointment Thursday night in his 10-round bout with Susumu Tokunaga of the Kansai at the Hibiya Public Hall. When the sports writers colony had predicted certain victory by Gen with a knockout, the best he could do was a draw. Gen weighed in at 127 pounds and Tokunaga 124 pounds.

Gen started auspiciously with a nice left jab that more than took care of Tokunaga's attempt at scoring with short left and right hooks. Gen too had little difficulty in ducking and stepping away from the lefts and rights of the slow-footed Tokunaga, and it seemed as if he would work his way to score a knockout in the later rounds. But he failed to follow up his punches to good advantage. The fight then turned to a clinching affair to the disgust of the fans and the result was a draw.

The fight clearly showed lack of sparring practice by Gen for his timing was something terrible. He kept missing his punches throughout the bout.

Yoichiro Hanada, 115 pounds, sometimes recognized as the fly-weight champion, took the decision over Hideichi Umei, 111 pounds, in the eight round semi-final. Both boys showed plenty of boxing skill and it was a good fight.

2,600,000 GIVEN JOBS BY CCC IN AMERICA

Fechner's Posthumous Report Shows 1,855,000,000 Trees Planted in Six Years' History

N.Y. Times

WASHINGTON,—"Work projects already suggested by Federal and State departments would keep a Civilian Conservation Corps of 1,500 camps busy for from thirty to fifty years," said the late Robert Fechner, Civilian Conservation Corps Director from its inception until his death, Dec. 31, in his annual report, posthumously presented today.

However, the number of CCC camps is to be cut down, as a result of slashes in the current budget, to 1,227, or an average monthly enrollment of 230,000 men.

VARIOUS CLASSES LISTED

In a review of the corps since its inception six years and three months earlier, Mr. Fechner mentioned that it had given employment to 2,600,000, of whom some 2,200,000 were young men, 185,000 were war veterans, 50,000 were Indians and 20,000 were territorials. It had planted 1,855,000,000 trees, constructed 106,800 miles of truck trails or minor roads, erected 73,590 miles of telephone lines, constructed 42,870 bridges and more than 49,500 buildings, reduced fire hazards over 2,000,000,000 acres, built 4,890,000 check dams in gullies, constructed 17,100,000 rods of fence, improved 3,406,000 acres of forest stands, constructed 5,575 impounding and large diversion dams, developed 18,000 springs, wells, water holes and small reservoirs and expended 9,375,000,000 man days fighting forest fires and preventing them.

"Perhaps the greatest single accomplishment of the CCC," was Mr. Fechner's testament, "has been its ability to make productive use of otherwise unwanted man power. It has given steady employment to an annual average of 300,000 men. Through their work programs youth has constructively altered the landscape of the United States. Had it not been for the CCC this huge supply of human energy would have gone to waste. Such a waste of human resources staggers the imagination.

"While the CCC does not teach military training, it does strengthen national defense by teaching discipline, improving the physical condition of young men, training them in skills useful in an emergency, and teaching them to live together, work together and exert their energies as a team. There is no doubt that the United States is a stronger nation because of the CCC."

A major change in the policy of the CCC last year came when the President relieved reserve officers as such from active duty with the corps. All the camps are now under the supervision of civilian company commanders, assisted by civilian "subalterns."

CONSERVATION WORK WIDESPREAD

In General, however, the same men have been employed on the same duties, except for a change in title and a transformation of military into civilian status. This step was deemed appropriate "in view of the essentially civil rather than military character of the CCC."

The major conservation activities of the corps last year included reforestation of waste lands, control of erosion on farm lands, the improvement of parks and forests for public use, increase of wild-life resources and a general strengthening of forest and park protection systems. On the average, three and a half men applied for each junior vacancy that occurred in the camps.

"Recent experience," wrote Mr. Fechner, "indicates rather conclusively that even in periods of rising employment this country will continue to be faced with the problem of furnishing to young men employment and training of the character found in the CCC camps."

NEW INVENTION CURBS FATAL PLANE DIVES

Sucking in, Then Blowing Out 'Dead Air' on Wing Top Described by U.S. Experts

N.Y. Times

NEW YORK—The Institute of the Aeronautical Sciences closed its eighth annual meeting at Columbia University recently with a report of 10 years of research leading finally to the elimination of the involuntary dives and spins into landing fields which have accounted for more than half of all the recent airplane fatalities.

The cause, loss of life, had long been recognized as the failure of the air-flow to follow the upper surface on an airplane wing, due to an automatic accumulation of "dead air" on top of the wing. Various devices had been adopted to blow off this dead air at a rearward tangent.

It remained for Dr. E. A. Stalker, head of the Department of Aeronautical Engineering at the University of Michigan, to solve the problem by sucking the dead air into the wing through a slot running all along the wing top. He gets rid of the air sucked in by blowing it out through a group of short slots near the wing tip.

It is as simple to describe as that. The aerodynamics and experimental data supporting the solution, moreover, were heard, discussed and generally accepted by an audience of about 200 of the foremost aeronautical engineers of this country, including observers from the important foreign nations.

PRACTICAL RESULTS OF DEVICE

The practical consequences of the Stalker device is that airplanes which had to be landed at the dangerous speed of eighty miles an hour can now be landed at forty. Planes will not need such large wings for safe landing or safe take-off. Consequently speed will be increased. The development was regarded as one of the most fruitful in years.

The aeronautical experts also heard an exploration of the high-speed possibilities of the near future by Frederic Fader, chief engineer, and E. Rushmore Child, chief airodynamicist of the Curtiss Aeroplane Division of the Curtiss-Wright Corporation.

They predicted with confidence that service airplanes of the military type, where speed is now being pushed up rapidly, will reach 480 miles an hour in two years and 560 in six years. They set the ultimate speed of the fastest possible propeller-driven airplane of normal design at 650 miles an hour.

These speeds were described as service speeds. They are not to be confused by the special short-burst made by the Messerschmidt Me. 109R in Germany last April by pushing the engine to twice its designed power rating and using dry ice to keep it from melting long enough to clock 469 miles an hour over three kilometers.

STRUCTURAL DESIGN VITAL

In proposing to pass the German specialty achievement in speed with ordinary service speeds the Curtiss engineers said these new highs in speed would be largely due to progress in structural design rather than to application of more power. Tripling the power, they said, would add only 8 per cent to the speed.

Among other developments on which the Curtiss engineers counted for higher speed was the improvement of propeller efficiency by the use of two propellers, mounted one behind the other on concentric shaft and rotating in opposite directions.

In this connection, a report of eighteen months of testing of such a dual-rotation propeller system by the army at Wright Field, Ohio, was read by Lieutenant H. M. McCoy.

He invited the attention of the aeronautical scientists to results indicating that such a dual propeller system was needed on all planes after they passed a speed of 350 miles an hour. He pointed out that the Italian Macchi-Castoldi seaplane which established the world's speed record of 440 miles an hour in 1934 used such a system.

However, where the Curtiss engineers foresaw the possibility of the fastest possible airplane with a speed of 650 miles an hour, Lieutenant McCoy held the fastest possible speed is more likely to be 550 miles. The speed of sound is 750 miles.

HEAR ADDRESS BY HINCKLEY

In the evining at the annual dinner and honors night of the Aeronautical Institute, 700 airplane scientists and industrialists heard an address by Robert H. Hinckley, chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

"In the eighteen months since the Authority was established to guide and service the fastest-growing public utility in this country," Mr. Hinckley said, "we have tried to avoid passing a single regulation not absolutely necessary and tried to avoid setting up any new governmental machinery to do work that can be done just as well—and even perhaps better—by private facilities."

He revealed the results of a survey indicating that the number of private airplane owners has remained practically at a standstill. Analysis of 15,000 non-commercial owners, he said, revealed that the average life of a private airplane was six years, but that four out of five owners got rid of them within a mean period of two and a half years and had not bought others.

As an encouraging sign that the national reserves of civilian pilots would shortly begin to expand again, however, he cited the enthusiatic response to the civilian pilot training program which Congress has recently subsidized. Where Congress provided enough money to enable 10,000 young people to learn to fly this year, Mr. Hinckley said, it would have been no trouble at all to enroll 50,000.

At the dinner also George W. Lewis, president of the Aeronautical Institute, announced the founding of "the most comprehensive aeronautical archives in the world" through the cooperation of W. A. M. Burden of National Aviation.

Under the title of Aeronautical Archives, Mr. Burden's complete aeronautical library of ten thousand items will be installed as a loan collection in Rockefeller Center adjoining the offices of the Aeronautical Institute, supplemented by the extensive technical library of the institute and the Aeronautical Index of 2,000,000 references resulting from a four-year grant under the WPA. Major Lester D. Gardner is to be president of Aeronautical Archives.

IMPORTANT AWARD GIVEN

The honors program at the dinner consisted of the presentation of four important aeronautical awards.

The Daniel Guggenheim Medal for 1939 was presented by Dr. J. C. Hunsaker, chairman of the Guggenheim medal board, to Donald Wills Douglas, president of the Douglas Aircraft Company, for contributions to the design and construction of transport airplanes.

The Sylvanus Alber Reed Award for 1939 was presented by Rear Admiral J. H. Towers, chief of the Naval Bureau of Aeronautics, to George Jackson Mead, vice president and chief engineer of the United Aircraft Corporation, for the development of high output aircraft engines.

The Lawrence Sperry Award for 1939 was presented by Dr. J. D. Den Hartog of Harvard University to Charles Maxwell Kearns Jr., research engineer in the propellers division of United Aircraft Corporation, for successfully measuring propeller vibration stresses in flight.

The Octave Chanute Award for 1939 was presented by Major Gen H. H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Corps, to Edmund Turney Allen, chief test pilot of the Boeing Aircraft Corporation, for his "outstanding contributions to methods and procedure in flight research."

Major James H. Doolittle was inducted as 1940 president of the aeronautical institute.

MEDICINE INCREASING HUMAN EYESIGHT SAID PERFECTED BY TOKYO OCULIST

A medicine which increases human eyesight to an amazing degree was perfected by an oculist of the medical department of Keio University, according to the Hochi.

If a person with a normal eyesight takes six tablets of it, in three doses and in one day, that person is enabled in several hours to see things in darkness which are invisible to the ordinary eye. The effect of the medicine lasts about one week, it is said.

The medicine is a combination of natrium dehydrochole oxide and cod-liver oil, which was perfected by Dr. Misao Uyemura of Keio University's medical department as a result of his four years' research. It stimulates the secretion of bile and invigorates the action of pancreatic juice, thus falicitating the absorption of fatty acids contained in cod-liver oil. As the consequence the visual cells of the retina are made amazingly active, making it possible to see things in darkness.

Dr. Uyemura tried the medicine on himself as well as other persons on about 200 occasions, invariably with favorable results.

It is said that the eye invigorated by the medicine could see things with only one-thirtieth to one-twentieth of the minimum light required by the human eye to see.

While the effects of the medicine lasted, Dr. Uyemura could walk on the dark roads where he could not walk without a torch in ordinary condition. He could see on dark nights far-off trees near his home as if on moon-lit nights.

It was about 10 years ago, while he was treating eye patients at Keio Hospital, that Dr. Uyemura conceived the idea of invigorating human eyesight. His regular research work on the subject was started four years ago and reached perfection last summer, according to the Hochi. The result of his study was made public at a recent meeting of ocular experts in Tokyo.

Dr. Sadao Suganuma, director of the eye section of Keio Hospital, who was Dr. Uyemura's adviser in his research work, said to the Hochi as follows:

"It is still premature to say that Dr. Uyemura's invention is perfect. Even though it is imperfect, it promises a great convenience to the mankind."

PLEBISCITE CONDUCTED

BEYROUTH, March 5—Continuing its plebiscite on why the Arabs should support the Allies, the newspaper "Annahar" has published a statement by Muhyddin, the noted Muslim journalist and politician.

He declares: "I want the Allies to win the war because I believe that authority should be in the hands of the community and not of the individual, that nations should not be divided into masters and slaves, that the principles of right and justice should supersede those of Nietsche and Machiavelli which have inspired Nazi activities during the last three years."

The statement concludes: "The democracies have struggled in the last few years against aggressive forces, but the bright and happy future which awaits humanity when the Allies win the war is worth all these precious sacrifices, and the Arabs will certainly share the fruits of victory and the happy future."

MORE SHELLS MADE

LONDON, March 6—Lord Stanhope, in a speech today, declared that Britain was now able to make ten times as many shells a week as she could in the last war. Giving a comparison of the industrial position of Great Britain with that of Germany, he pointed out that at the moment the war began Germany already had all her industries mobilised and has no reserves to fall back on. British production, on the other hand, is being improved upon all the time.

Mitchell Hepburn, Ontario's provincial premier and a strong opponent to the Mackenzie Government appeared to be chiefly responsible for the reports which have appeared in the press. According to Premier Hepburn, many demonstrations were staged during the month of February by the discontented student pilots at St. Thomas training camp.

He reported that these men were "dead sick of having nothing to do but polish door-knobs and sweep the floor." Three hundred of the men marched through the streets of St. Thomas and failed to return to the camp. Forty policemen are now stationed at the camp to prevent further desertions and demonstrations.

Mr. Hepburn then concluded his sensational revelations by challenging the Canadian Minister of Defense Rogers to deny the story if he were able to prove that the facts were false.

LETTER MAY BE FALSE

RIO DE JANEIRO, March 6—A letter allegedly written by the captain of the German steamer Wakama stating that he and his crew of 33 were not fired upon by British machineguns when they were in lifeboats was commented on by the Gazetta de Noticias.

This paper points out that this letter contradicts the statements made by Admiral Harwood when the British cruiser Hawkins visited this port. According to Admiral Harwood, 46 men which is the entire crew of the Wakama had been saved and placed on board a British cruiser. This makes it seem evident, the paper continues that either 13 men have been lost or else the letter is a forgery. The paper recalls that a bullet riddled life boat from the Wakama washed ashore and was found.

Y.C.A.C. MEMBERS PREPARE FOR ANNUAL MEETING

By SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

YOKOHAMA, March 9—The annual report of the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club reached members today in preparation for the annual general meeting on March 29. The report was adopted by the permanent committee on March 4 comprising C. Heseltine, chairman; B. Deveson, T. G. Ely, P. Nipkow, and W. J. Tomlinson.

The executive committee is: R. A. Roberts, president; M. C. Cooke, vice-president; C. M. Decker, E. Dentici, F. R. Harriss, M. Jalenques, N. K. Lamport, P. H. Lord, S. G. Oram, P. H. Palmer, and I. B. White.

The substance of the report, of course, is for members alone, but it makes a most excellent showing, and reveals what an important part the Y.C.A.C. plays in the social life of the Yokohama community. The document is 21 folio pages, covering every phase of the club's life, and revealing a very fine administration and a thorough business organization.

One of the club's lively and informative activities is the publication of a weekly bulletin, which is a sort of newspaper reporting the club's sports and social round, and laying out the program for the coming days. For instance this week's number announces rugby game this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock between the first fifteen and Meiji Gakuin; soccer match tomorrow at 10:30 a.m. between the second eleven and Toyo Babcock; hockey matches tomorrow at 2 p.m. between the second eleven and Kyokia O. B. and between the first eleven and Teidai at 3 p.m.

Cinema night is next Wednesday, showing "Little Tough Guys in Society." There will be dance on March 17 from 6 to 9 p.m., with music furnished by the orchestra tea dance and the Toho swing band.

On Saturday, March 16 at 8 p.m. a rugby interport dinner is scheduled, and on Thursday, March 21st, at 8 p.m. a stag dinner in honor of N. K. Lamport and P. H. Lord.

Cost of Living

abreast of political developments in this country and the possibility of Mayor Fu ironing out the differences which exist—no one knows what they are—must be taken into consideration. It appears very doubtful, however, that he will stay on.

HUGE JEWELRY THEFT

The largest jewelry theft in years was perpetrated by a group of clever burglars, on Saturday evening, when they forced their way into the apartment of Mrs. Alfred G. Denbigh, wife of the British Consular Agent at Hakodate, Japan, and departed with a small safe containing jewelry valued at $158,000.

The theft was kept secret by the French police until yesterday, because the detectives in charge of the case, feared that the thieves could get some points as to the activities of the police in their endeavor to nab the criminals.

From all accounts, it appears that Mrs. Denbigh, who is living in Shanghai since a few months, went to a cinema show at 6 p.m. on Saturday. When she returned, she found that the thugs had broken into her apartment, had forced open a wardrobe trunk and had stolen the little safe kept there and in which she kept her jewels.

Even today, the French police have not made any arrests and it is expected to take quite some time before they will nab the men. All steamships are scrutinized before their departure in order to prevent the jewels being smuggled out of the city.

LABOR UNREST CONTINUES

Labor unrest continues in Shanghai. Some 2,000 workers of the China General Omnibus Co., Ltd., struck on Thursday last and the following day submitted demands to the management, which, to say the least, were absolutely unreasonable. It is a fact that the steady increase in the cost of living is beginning to tell its tale, but the bus workers in particular, have been very well treated and have had a number of increases since local prices skyrocketed.

Besides, they make a large amount of "squeeze" each day, an evil which the company has not been able to eradicate until now. An emergency service was maintained by foreign drivers and Inspectors selling tickets to passengers during the strike.

The service was resumed again on Sunday, although the demands of the workers had not been met. Negotiations are now proceeding and their outcome is keenly awaited, because if the workers should get satisfaction, it is more or less certain that the tram workers both in the Settlement and the French Concession, will also go on strike until they obtain similar terms.

SHANGHAI SOCIALLY

During the past week, Shanghai has been quite active socially. Outstanding affair of the season was the ball held in aid of the French War Fund, at the French Club last Thursday when some 1,200 persons attended and had an extraordinarily good time. Two orchestras and veritable Divisions of servants did everything to please the guests, while Shanghai's ten debutantes were introduced to and presented with a beautiful white-gold brooch by Mme. H. Cosme, wife of the French Ambassador to China.

Local Welshmen celebrated St. David's Day in a very quiet manner this year. As was the case with all other national societies, the annual ball for this season was cancelled in view of the European war. Wreaths were nevertheless deposited at the cenotaph on Friday morning, and all Welshmen united on the same evening to have dinner at the American Women's Club. There was some dancing afterwards, but the function was informal and not a single guest of honor was invited.

This week, numerous affairs are also being held. To start with, "Liliom", that famous play by Ferenc Molnar is opening at the Lyceum Theater tonight and will be shown for five successive days in aid of the Friends of Finland Fund by a group of amateurs. I was invited to see the dress-rehearsal last night and if the performances are going to be as good, I am confident in that the Finnish fund will be richer by several thousand dollars.

Another ball is being held on Friday. It is that organized by the Russian ex-Army and Navy Officers Association. This will be an essentially Russian affair but nevertheless attractive to many non-Russians who know that at these annual functions, the floor-show and costumes displayed are excellent and seldom disappoint.

Meiji Shrine Baseball Stadium To Be Opened For 1940 On March 17

Weather permitting, the baseball stadium in the Outer Gardens of the Meiji Shrine will be held on Sunday, March 17, and in case of rain on the following Sunday.

Members of the baseball teams and officials both of the leagues and the Shrine will first report to the Shrine at 9 a.m., after which a program will start in the stadium at 10:30 a.m.

There will be three ball games. Managers of the Tokyo Six University league will play managers of the Tokyo Collegiate league; oldtimers of the Tokyo Six University league will take on the Tokyo Sports Writers club; and the Tokyo Six University league O.B. will meet the Middle School O.B.

BRITISH ARGUE MORALS OF GOOD WAR BLOCKADE

Britain's Economic Warfare Proving Effective, Commons Told by Birmingham Bishop

Christian Science Monitor

LONDON—First evidence that economic warfare, Britain's silent second arm of offense against Germany, is proving effective has given rise to debates on its moral as well as material aspects both in the Houses of Parliament and the upper and lower houses of the convocation of Canterbury.

The moral aspect of the blockade was discussed by Anglican bishops on the resolution of the Bishop of Birmingham that the Archbishop of Canterbury should "petition the Government so to adjust the blockade as to allow the free importation of foodstuffs into Germany in accordance with the precept, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him."

CITES PRECEPT

The Bishop of Birmingham said he believed he spoke for many Christian people in taking the view that the starvation of the enemy, especially women and children, was a "horrible" thought.

Some foodstuffs, he admitted, could be turned into munitions but he contended there must be others whose transformatiion was not worthwhile.

But other bishops opposed the resolution and thought its implication would be misinterpreted.

The Bishop of Winchester recalled German radio assurances that Germany had plenty of food.

It should not be forgotten, the Archbishop of Canterbury said, that Germany was using every endeavor to deprive the British people of food from overseas.

Application of blockade was a fully recognized practice of international law, the Archbishop continued, and arguments against it were really arguments against war. He said he had discussed the matter with members of the Government, and while they expressed sympathy with the viewpoint voiced by the Bishop of Birmingham, they maintained it wasn't really possible to discriminate between different kinds of foodstuffs.

The Bishop of Birmingham subsequently withdrew his resolution.

Humane preoccupations, it is pointed out here, should not obscure the fact that Britain's economic warfare cannot yet have produced the effect of a hunger blockade against Germany.

OWN FAULT, IF LACK

If stories of Germany's plentiful supplies of food, as given in its official utterances, are accurate, it is contended by many here that there is little need to consider this issue now. If already there is a food shortage in Germany this results from the policy the Reich Government has followed for years—the so-called cannons not butter campaign whereby everything was sacrificed to but one end that of building the Greater Third Reich.

Germany, in fact, for years past, ever since the Nazis came to power, has been subjected to an ever-growing lowering of the standard of living, so that it entered the war with conditions the Western Democracies had long considered too low.

In fact, the Nazi leaders had gradually accustomed their populations to a subsistence level in which bread, potatoes, margarine, and very little meat were the mainstays of the diet.

So far, therefore, the Germans really are only on short rations and are not being starved unless their Government has sold large stocks of foodstuffs, stored up for war, so as to obtain foreign oil or other essential war products, or unless leading Nazis have deliberately deceived their followers for years past—actions for which the Allies are not responsible.

HEADWAY EVIDENT

Debates on the development of economic warfare in both Houses of Parliament, following Government statements by Mr. Ronald H. Cross, the Minister of Economic Warfare, and Lord Hankey, Minister without Portfolio, reveal clearly that Britaiin is making headway in the complicated task of preventing Germany from obtaining essential foreign supplies for prolonging the war and of continuing and increasing Britain's exports so as to pay for munitioins and other necessary overseas supplies.

Part of the task concerned with preventing Germany from securing foreign supplies, it was pointed out, is more difficult than during the World War because then Germany was fighting on three fronts, whereas now it has access to the materials of all Eastern Europe and the greater part of Asia, since the only war frontier is toward France and at sea.

To prevent Germany getting supplies from these countries the Allies have had to buy them themselves, especially in the Balkans.

The number and the complication of issues involved in the solution of these intricate problems has resulted in demands both in this debate and throughout the press that there should be a larger measure of co-ordination of all departments and interests concerned.

Momentarily two committees, one consisting of ministers, and the other of senior Government officials, are engaged upon this work.

QUESTION OF UNEMPLOYED

Even after admitting that Germany has an advantage in that its economy has been that of war for some time past, and this country had to complete the change in a few months, there still is much concern that after 4½ months of war no organization exists for utilizing 1,250,000 unemployed.

The problems of prices, wages, and war financing are all so interwoven these days that demand for financial and economic coordination is growing. But both in the Commons and House of Lords the Government spokesmen showed little enthusiasm for the idea.

Nevertheless the picture Mr. Cross gave the Commons was of Germany suffering economic difficulties at this early stage of the present war almost as grave as after two years of the World War.

"Our economic attack came into operation with a rapidity and suddenness which was not anticipated, and it has given German economy a sharp shock," Mr. Cross told the Commons.

"We look forward to the day when we shall have strangled Germany's economic life so that she can no longer sustain her war effort," he said.

"We believe we can bring very much nearer the day of victory and in so doing we shall have played a great part in saving the lives of our people," Mr. Cross added.

RISE IN TRADE

Further encouragement in the economic field is seen in the rise in value of British exports announced recently.

December exports at £40,169,000 were 7.5 per cent higher than in November and for the first time since the war higher than in the corresponding month of 1938.

Imports at £86,582,000, against £83,988,000 in November, showed an increase less steep.

As a result December's visible adverse balance was no greater than November's, whereas it had risen steeply in each preceding month of war.

LOWER FISH PRICES SCHEDULED FOR TOKYO CITY AFTER MARCH 20

Fish will be sold at lower prices after March 20, according to the Yomiuri. Effective after that date sales prices will be pegged 35 per cent higher than central market quotations.

All of which is welcome news to householders who have been paying as much as 100 per cent more, the Yomiuri commented.

COMPANY SCHEDULED

Arrangement for this improved situation is being made at suggestion of the Commerce and Industry Ministry. First step will be establishment of the Fish Retailing Company, capitalized at ¥195,000, jointly subscribed by commission merchants (roughly numbering 1,400 in the city) and the wholesale purchasers (totaling about 20,000).

The new company will divide Tokyo into 35 blocks, corresponding with ward divisions, and appoint three agencies on an average in each block. The agencies will be selected from among official or private markets, or common retail stores. The company will see to the selling of more popular fish such as sardines, flatfish and mackeral at prices 35 per cent higher than quoted at the Central Fish Market, from which the fish will be supplied.

PRICES POSTED

The appointed agencies will be under obligation to post daily sales prices for each kind of fish in the most visible places in front of their stores, so the customers can see the selling quotations at a glance every day, and also—which is the chief aim of the present enterprise—other fish sellers will be compelled to follow the agencies' prices and cannot profiteer as the majority of them are supposed to have been doing.

In consideration of those living in suburban corners, a plan is now being discussed by those concerned that radio broadcasting may be used for announcing the agencies' daily prices.

Mining Undeveloped In Argentine Region

Although mineral resources of Argentina are tremendous, they are comparatively undeveloped because of their remoteness in unpopulated districts.

Manufacturing, though assiduously protected in Argentina, is insufficient to supply all domestic needs and foreign trade, therefore, is vital to the nation.

Buenos Aires is the principal seaport of Argentina and nearly four fifths of the nations imports and half its exports flow through there. Rosario, the second port, also is the second largest city. It is located on the broad Parana river.

Argentina became a local provisional government, independent of Spain or other nations, in 1810. A sanguinary war for independence followed, however. Britain finally recognized the United provinces of Rio de la Plata in 1823.

4 Homers Feature Pro Ball Twinbill

Four home runs featured the opening day's doubleheader of the Tokyo Mayor's pennant series of professional baseball teams at the Korakuen stadium Friday.

Manager and Second Baseman Karita of the Senators got two of them to aid his team to a 4-3 victory over the Eagles in an 11-inning game in the curtain-raiser, Rightfielder Nakajima of the Giants got the other as the latter ran roughshod over the Senators, 10-1, in the night cap.

The summaries were:

Eagles	020 100 000 00—	3	9	4
Senators	100 001 001 01—	4	10	5

Batteries: Kameda and Kiyoiye; Muramatsu and Sato.

Giants	201 203 002—	10	13	1
Senators	000 010 000—	1	7	4

Batteries: Nakao and Yoshiwara; Kaneko, Asaoka and Sato.

Matsuyama Accepts Challenge by Ogata

Kinrey Matsuyama, national three cushion billiards champion, will defend his title against Koya Ogata, hope of the Kansai district, in a challenge match on March 17 and 18 at the Hankyu Kaikan in Sannomiya, Kobe.

Play on both days will start at 2 p.m. and 6 p.m. The winner will be the one first scoring 200 points in four sessions of 50 point seach.

Eight Japanese Paintings Will Be Sent to Brazil

To adorn the walls of the Japanese young men's association headquarters and grammar school and other public buildings in San Paulo, Brazil, eight Japanese paintings will be sent there by the Society for International Cultural Relations on the Argentina Maru which leaves Yokohama Monday.

Executed by eight painters of rising fame, the pictures represent lanscapes, flowers or birds. They are expected to serve the purpose of acquainting Brazilians with Japanese fine arts and life. They were painted at the request of Junzo Sakane, Japanese Consul-General at Sao Paulo.

Konoye to Conduct Symphony

Domei Tsushin

BERLIN, March 8—The well-known Japanese conductor, Viscount Hidemaro Konoye, who at present is visiting in Germany, will conduct a concert given at Munich by the Munich Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra on March 20, it was revealed here today.

LITTLE KNOWN OF EARLY ARGENTINA BEFORE SPANIARDS SETTLED COUNTRY

Little is known of the early history of Argentina before advent of the Spaniards.

The hardiest natives were the Araucanians, a branch of the Indo-Peruvian race. The Pampean race belongs to a lower grade, and includes the Patagonians and Pueliches of the South, and many northern tribes, such as the Charruas. The distinct Brazilio-Guaranians include the rude tribes who were civilized by the Jesuits. All were in a low state of civilization.

The search for a westward searoute to the Moluccas led to the discovery of the Argentine and of the Magellan Strait in 1520. In 1516 the Spaniard Juan Diaz de Solis sailed up the river Plate, but was slain by savages as soon as he landed; and the expedition by Cabbot some ten years later made no serious attempt at settlement.

In 1535 Pedro de Mendoza arrived with a large force and founded the city of Buenos Aires. Incredible difficulties were encountered both from the scarcity of food and the hostility of the Indians, and the city was twice abandoned.

But the Spaniards were more successful at Asuncion, later the capital of Paraguay, and in 1573 the brave Juan de Garay, advancing southward from that city founded Santa Fe, and in 1580 was strong enough to refund Buenos Aires, which soon became a flourishing place.

3 WORLD INDOOR TRACK RECORDS BROKEN IN N.Y.

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, March 10—Three new world indoor track records were established in the Knight of Columbus games held here last night in Madison Square Garden.

Jim Herbert, of New York University, broke his own world record for the 600-yard run with a time of one minute 10.8 seconds. The National Amateur Athletic Union champion, Charles Belcher, of Georgia Tech., was second by two feet. Herbert's former record of one minute 11.1 seconds had been established on March 12, 1938.

Gregory Rice, of Notre Dame University, finished the two-mile race in eight minutes 56.2 seconds, bettering the previous world record of eight minutes 58 seconds held by Donald Lash, of the Indiana State Police.

The world record for the 16-pound shotput was improved for the fourth time this season by George Blozis, of Georgetown University, who tossed the shot 55 feet 6¼ inches.

Blozis heaved the shot 55 feet 8¾ inches at the National A. A. U. Indoor Championships in New York on February 25.

Chuck Fenske won the one-mile race for the seventh time in a row this season with a time of four minutes 13.2 seconds. Glenn Cunningham was second, Gene Venzke, third, and John Borian, fourth.

Mystic Nigatsu-Do

by priests at the top of the southern flight of stone steps to usher the party of 15 priests, who have been consecrated with purification and prayers, down to the small shrine in which the deity of the sacred well is enshrined, to offer prayers before they proceed to the well.

WATER DRAWN

The structure housing the celebrated well, which is situated near the shrine, is festooned with sacred straw ropes and surrounded with sacred trees specially obtained from Mt. Kasuga as a measure of consecration. After the religious devotion, the head of the party of 15 priests walks into the structure, in measured steps, accompanied by a young priest, and after offering a prayer in the darkness he draws the holy water with the aid of his follower, while the rest of the priests stand outside on guard.

When the water is drawn into a large wooden container, a party of men in white garments of Shinto origin carry the container on their shoulders up to the February Hall on the hill. When the bearers gain the certain place on route in their journey to the hall, the priests standing outside the well house on guard suddenly blow their huge shell horns, warning authorities at the February Hall to prepare to receive the holy water. An atmosphere of austerity reigns supreme as the ceremony is repeated several times until a sufficient quantity of water is drawn.

OLD TRADITION

The well is associated with an old tradition which is of Shinto character. When the Priest Jitchu, the second Lord Abbott of the Todaiji Temple, first initiated the February service, he held a festival in honor of all the divinities of the land. On that occasion, so tradition goes, a deity by the name of Wakasa from Wakasa in Yamato (present Nara) failed to arrive at the scene of festival in good time. He took his failure very much to heart, and to make up for it he promised the priest to send water from Wakasa on the occasion of the February service every year.

It is believed by many who make pilgrimage to the hall on the night of March 12 that the well is always dry and is suddenly filled with the holy water on that night while the prayers are being offered to the deity of the Wakasa well at the small shrine by the 15 priests.

The holy water thus drawn is said to remain fresh for the rest of the year. Many devotees believe that it has a power of healing diseases of all kinds and get some of it from the temple. The water is not clear when it is first drawn from the well, but it becomes quite transparent after a few days. A part of it is turned into a jar, closed and sealed air-tight and placed on the altar of Kwannon, or Goddess of Mercy, which is the object of worship at the February Hall.

RITES FOLLOW

The drawing of water is followed with amazing rites for two nights to bind the ceremonies of the two weeks. As a part of this demonstration, eight priests dressed in Tartar costumes carry into the February Hall a burning torch, weighing about 80 pounds, and violently manipulate it in a mysterious manner, keeping time to the Tartar music. The burning torch is tossed and thrown, now on this side and now on that side, in the hall of worship and the inner sanctuary in the midst of fire-flakes and sparks. It is said that the priests never get burned from sparks and no accident of any kind, originating in this ritual, has ever occurred.

The February Hall stands on the hill, looking down upon the hall of great bronze Buddha and commanding a beautiful scene of the ancient capital of Nara. It was originally erected by the Priest Jitchu in 752 A.D. and rebuilt in 1669. The priest was the discipline of Ryoben, the first Lord Abbot of the Todaiji Temple.

MOTIVE EXPLAINED

The motive for which the priest initiated the February ceremonies is interesting. According to a tradition, he entered a cave he found in the Mt. Kasagi and walked northward for about two miles and a half until when he came upon some pious people praying to Kwannon and enjoying a happy existence in the Buddhist paradise. Envious of this life of peace and happiness in the paradise, he desired to reproduce this condition of life on earth and went to the seashore of Naniwa (present Osaka) to pray to Kwannon for the realization of his hope. After the prayer, he saw to his astonishment a small image of Kwannon drifting in the sea toward him. The image was about 10½ inches tall. As he picked it up from the water, he felt a warmth in it as if Goddess of Mercy was actually living. In gratitude, he took it home with him and had the February Hall erected to initiate the February ceremonies with this image of the Goddess as the object of worship.

PRIESTS PREPARE

The 15 priests in charge of the service, who were formally appointed to the task by the authorities of the Todaiji Temple in December, last year, have been going through a most rigorous formula of Buddhistic observances in confinement since the beginning of this month after nearly a month of spiritual preparations. The appointment is considered a great honor, paving the way to promotion in the priestly ranks. It is said that St. Kobo, one of the greatest priests in the history of Buddhism in Japan, was also appointed to this post while he was still receiving training at this temple in the ninth century.

During confinement in a hall, known as the Sanro-sho, they are prohibited from speaking to each other. The tasks to which they are assigned during the confinement include chanting of the sutra at certain six different times of day and night, and some kinds of manual work. Any priest who violates the regulations during the confinement is required to go through a severe ritual as a measure of repentance. In addition, his name and nature of his offense will be recorded in detail and preserved for future reference as a part of punishment.

U.S.C. Tops Oregon State For Pacific Coast Cage Title, Winning 2 Straight

Domei Tsushin

LOS ANGELES, March 10—The University of Southern California won the Pacific Coast Conference basketball title last night by defeating Oregon State College, 63-26, for its second consecutive victory in a three game series in the play-offs for the championship between winners in the northern and southern divisions of the conference. Half time scores were: 32-14 and 31-12.

BUILDING TRADE UNDER STUDY BY LONDONERS

Wider Allocation of Contracts Urged by Government Under Situation During Wartime

From Our Labor Correspondent
The Times, London

LONDON—The correspondence in The Times on building in war-time and the use of the building industry's resources of man-power, organization, and materials, is being carefully studied in the Government Departments concerned. There is no desire to minimize the dislocation caused by the war or the severe loss suffered by certain sections of the industry—particularly by its professional classes and by the smaller employers, though for small employers A.R.P. work may have been available.

The direct consequences of the war on the industry have been intensified by the control of certain building materials and the ban on loan expenditure by local authorities. All this is fully recognized.

LARGE PROGRAM

On the other hand, the large Government program of construction has given the industry a great amount of work. The change over from civil to Government emergency work created many problems of adjustment, but the last available figures, which relate to mid-November, show the amount of employment in the building industry to be a little above the normal at this time of year.

This small relative improvement did not, it is true, apply equally to all classes of workmen, and there were about 4,000 more skilled men unemployed at the end of 1939 than at the end of 1938. In the whole industry the number of the unemployed was 30,000 less than 12 months before. When the returns from the building and public works industries are taken together the fall in the rate of unemployment was nearly 5 per cent (2.7 per cent in building; 12.4 per cent in public works contracting) in mid-November.

While, therefore, general employment has suffered no great setback, the difficulties created by the war have fallen heavily on the smaller and medium-sized firms. An assurance can be given that the importance of making the fullest possible use of the organization and resources of the building industry has been kept steadily before the contracting Departments, and the measures taken to secure a wider distribution of contracts will, it is expected, benefit the hard-hit sections of the industry.

Work on the Government program is being spread over all districts in the United Kingdom, and—taking contracts of over £100,000—is being carried out by about 100 firms of main contractors. In addition an unascertained but certainly substantial number of firms have secured work as sub-contractors. It is, of course, realized that the division of work among firms has not been equal, but equality has not been possible because of the differences in financial resources, size of staff, equipment and organizing experience of different firms. It is strongly represented that the interests of the Departments and also the taxpayer's interests necessitate the placing of contracts with the larger firms.

Nevertheless it is the Government's view that a wider allocation of contracts is practicable, and therefore a central register has been established for recording the capital and organization of all the principal firms of civil engineering and building contractors and the value of Government contracts on which they are engaged. This information is passed on to the Departments, and they have been informed that the policy of the Government is to place contracts as evenly as possible so as to prevent an excess of work in one case and unemployment in another.

REVIEW OF PROGRAM

A constant review of the Government's building program is maintained by the Works and Building Priority Sub-Committee, meeting under the chairmanship of the Parliamentary Secretary of the Ministry of Labor. The committee is kept informed of the position of the industry and of the labor and other resources available. Subject to Cabinet authority, the Priority Sub-Committee is responsible for the coordination of the work of the several contracting departments which are represented on it. It has its own secretariat, and examines and reports on the problems seen, and to be foreseen, as effects of the war on the building industry, and is advised by panels representing employers and workers in the building and civil engineering industries.

There are, besides, larger joint consultative committees for England and Wales and for Scotland, on which representatives of the building industry and of the Government Departments—meeting less frequently than the Priority Sub-Committee and its advisory panels—discuss problems that arise. Still another body exists for keeping constant watch on Government building requirements.

Contracts on the basis of cost plus a percentage for profit are no longer placed for building works unless the circumstances are so exceptional that the Departments cannot prepare the plans, specifications, and bills of quantities necessary for tenders. In the first rush of war preparation contracts were placed on a "cost plus" basis with the purpose of saving time, but for the future the practice of calling for tenders will be restored.

Know Nothing and Profit, Says Screen Commentator

Don Clark is one man who profits by not knowing what he's talking about.

His is one of the hidden voices. He's a screen and radio commentator.

And the secret of his success, he would have you believe, is his total unfamiliarity with any and all of the topics upon which he discourses. Were he an expert on sports, his remarks would be too technical to be interesting to the average motion picture audience. His monologues on piscatorial pleasures would be dull lectures if he knew anything about fishing.

Now he is doing the commentary on Columbia Pictures' "I Married Adventure," which is the autobiography of Osa (Mrs. Martin) Johnson, famed explorer, and he feels inclined to speak more freely than ever, since so few people have ever been to Africa.

Clark unearths what he considers the most interesting and amusing things about his subjects, then looks at them through the eyes of the average movie-goer. He likes to pun, but always apologizes and admits that many of the jaw-breaking words he uses are as unfamiliar to him as they are to the audience.

His advice to young men is to turn explanatory remarker—and get an education guaranteed to be 100 per cent useless!

13-Year-Old American Girl Breaks World Swim Mark

Domei Tsushin

MIAMI, Florida, March 9—Thirteen-year-old Patty Aspinall from Indianapolis today set a new world mark for the 220-yard women's breaststroke event in the Amateur Athletic Union Women's Indoor swimming championships held here. Her time was 3 minutes 10.1 seconds against the old record of 3 minutes 13 seconds held by Miss Fujiko Katsutani, of Hawaii.

Field Games Feature Y.C.A.C. Program Sunday

Special to The Japan Times

YOKOHAMA, March 10—Today proved to be a most enlivening and spring like day, enabling members of the Y.C. and A.C. to enjoy a series of field games.

In the first game of the day, the Club seconds took the Toyo Babcock Co.'s soccer team by a 10 to 1 count. Peter Blamey starred as goalie for the winners.

The Club regulars proved a bit too strong for the Rikkyo O.B. fifteen and won by a 31-3 score.

Three games of field hockey were played. The Club women's team was downed 2 to 1 by the Yokohama International school team of boys and girls. The Kyokai O.B. also tumbled the Club's second team, 6 to 1. In the best game of the day, the Club's first team nosed out the Teidai team, 3 to 1.

O.B.'s in Scoreless Tie

The Kanto and Kansai O. B. (old boys) all-stars fought to a 1-all tie in their tenth annual soccer game Sunday afternoon at the Koshien stadium, near Osaka. Both teams scored in the second half.

YOKOHAMA, KOBE TIE, 3-3 IN SOCCER MEET

The Y. C. & A. C. and K. R. & A. C. fought to a 3-all tie in their 51st soccer interport last Saturday at Kobe

The Kobe soccerites, notwithstanding the fact that they had to play with minus one man after the first [illegible] minutes of play, Grossman forced to retire because of a hard injury led 3 goals to 1 up to the last 20 minutes of the game.

Baer was the outstanding star for the home team and Blamey for the visitors.

The game as described by The Japan Chronicle follows:

Kobe scored first, through Guterres, and Planas equalized. Then in the second half Baer added two goals, both of them grand bits of work, and Kobe appeared well set for victory. The K. R. & A. C. were good value for this two goal lead, playing with a fast forward line in which the inside men dropped back on occasion to stiffen the halves. Fortunately Lopez and Winter were at their best, and they wisely adopted the policy of clearing when under pressure without too much regard to turning defense into attack. A high cross-wind sprang up shortly after the game began, making the finer points of football too dangerous to bother about. Perhaps overconfidence was partly the cause of the final trouble—for Kobe's ten men were certainly better than Yokohama's seven—but the strain of ever filling the gap also had much to do with it. The K. R. & A. C. were a very tired team in the closing minutes when first Blamey and then Cull nipped through to rob them of victory.

Blamey was the visitors' star, giving a remarkable exhibition in the second half when the wind kept play mainly on his side of the field. Yokohama were well served by both their wingers, Craigie being conspicuous in the first half, and at left full back Milne was practically as good as Lopez or winter.

In Kobe's attack Baer was outstanding. Kobe's skipper has never played more tirelessly or to better effect in all his long interport career. Both his goals were gems, and he made opening for others which ought to have produced a longer lead than a mere 3-1. Guterres and Mehta also shone, but in fact the whole Kobe team was rankly poor. Yokohama were better than expected, for although they had most of the luck there was, it must be admitted that they were good enough to seize their chances in the nick of time.

The K.R. and A.C. and Y.C. and A.C. teams to meet in the women's basketball interport, to be played in Kobe on Saturday, March 23, have been selected as follows:

K.R. and A.C.: Forwards: Misses. T. Krebs and M. Jarmain. Center: Miss L. Jungers. Guards: Mrs. A. Davison and Miss R. Cox. Substitutes: Mrs. J. Christensen and the Misses. C. da Costa, B. Oxford, J. Kawasjee, J. Crane.

Y.C. and A.C.: Forwards: Misses D. Coolian and H. Lord. Center: Miss I. Lord. Guards: Misses V. Albeck and T. Planas. Substitutes: Misses M. Crane and Daphne Coolican.

COVERING THE WORLD

From German Sources

SOCIETY FOUNDED

VIENNA, March 10—A Southeastern Europe Society has been founded here under the sponsorship of the German Minister of Economics, Walther Funk. The purpose of the society will be to promote economic and cultural relations between Germany and southeastern European states with special regard to the interests of Vienna and Ostmark.

U.S. SHIP STOPPED

ISTANBUL, March 10—The British authorities in Gibraltar recently stopped an American ship carrying a cargo of iron for Turkey. The cargo was confiscated and unloaded in Malta, according to word received here today.

Other goods however were turned over to the Turkish buyers by the British only after the documents had been examined by the British Consulate-General in Turkey. Due to the fact that American goods are badly needed in Turkey, there is growing indignation over the methods adopted by the British.

INCREASE OF GANGS

GENEVA, March 10—The French police have been feverishly working to stop the sudden increase of gangs in France to smuggle gold and currency abroad ever since the introduction of a new French devisen legislation, according to a report received here today.

According to a French paper Petit Dauphinois, two gangs have already been arrested. One, according to this paper, had its headquarters in the Bank of Saint Cramarand on the Rue de Lapaiz, Paris. Seven of the bank officials were arrested and foreign currency valued at 600,000 francs was confiscated.

The second gang of smugglers had its headquarters in a certain travel agency and was headed by a Rumanian known as Mr. Breger and his wife. Here the police confiscated foreign currency amounting to 50,000 francs.

So far 14 persons have been arrested on the charge of attempting to smuggle gold and currency out of France. The arrested persons will be placed before a military tribunal in the near future.

SWEDISH TANKER TAKEN

STOCKHOLM, March 9—One of the largest tankers sailing under the Swedish flag was taken over today by the Swedish Government. It will be used to transport oil from America to Sweden.

This latest measure of the Swedish Government follows the recent decision made by Sweden, Norway and Denmark to requisition ships belonging to private companies for transport of vital foodstuffs and raw materials.

WATER TRAFFIC RESUMED

SOFIA, March 9—Water traffic between Bulgarian and Soviet Black Sea ports was resumed on Friday after being closed for the past 25 years.

The 3,000 tons Soviet steamer Svanitea arrived at Varna carrying a cargo of cotton, caviar and fish for Bulgaria. The Soviet State Steamship Company now contemplates establishing regular steamship service between Odessa and Varna.

Bulgarian steamship circles have also announced that their ships will make periodic calls at Odessa. However they have not planned on establishing regular service on this route. Later, it is reported that steamships belonging to both countries will make Burgas a regular port of call.

According to Bulgarian economic circles the renewal of trade relations between Soviet Russia and Bulgaria will bring much more business to Bulgarian ports.

Before the World War, according to these circles, ship traffic in Bulgaria amounted to 11,000,000 tons. In 1939, this figure dropped to 500,000 tons. These quarters now hope that with renewal of water traffic between Soviet Russia and Bulgaria, an increase of at least 750,000 tons annually will be enjoyed.

PREMIER'S VISIT PLAYED UP

ROME, March 10—The visit of the Egyptian premier Ali Maher Pasha to Sudan was played up by the Egyptian press according to a report received here today. The papers emphasize the fact that Egypt and Sudan are really one unit and should be recognized as such.

The Ahram for instance writes that the Sudan area could not be made useful and productive without the cooperation of Egypt. While the Mokattam came to the conclusion that the frontier existing between Egypt and Sudan was invisible.

An Egyptian weekly paper, Achir Saa asks to whom Egypt owes the fact that custom barriers separate Egypt from the Sudan as well as numerous other border restrictions. This weekly deplores the fact that Egyptians cannot travel to Khartoum with the same freedom as they could go to Assuan.

FIRE REPORTED

NEW YORK, March 7—The crew of the Queen Elizabeth which arrived here today reported that two days prior to the departure of the vessel from England a fire broke out aboard ship causing damage estimated at $30,000.

Another incident occurred when the crew learned a few hours after the departure of the Queen Elizabeth that that ship's destination was not Southampton but New York. It is reported that clashes occurred between the crew and the officers when the crew, in view of the submarine danger, demanded a special increase in wages.

TRADE INCREASES

ROME, March 9—Trade between Italy and Albania has witnessed considerable advance during the past two years, according to a statement which was released here today.

Italian imports to Albania increased from 27,849 tons in 1934 to 38,000 tons in 1938. On the other hand imports from Albania during the same period jumped from 28,828 tons to 170,996 tons. The statement emphasizes that the enormous increase in trade occurred before the Albania's fusion with Italy.

Well informed circles here believe that since the fusion took place, trade between the two countries witnessed a still further increase. Some quarters believe that during the past year trade has more than doubled.

From British Sources

SAILORS DECORATED

LONDON, March 10—Seven members of the British submarine Ursula have been decorated by His Royal Highness the Duke of Kent at a northwest coast port. It was this submarine which recently sank a German cruiser of the Koln class in the North Sea.

Men of the 24 years class have been called up for registration yesterday. They number about 300,000.

SETTLEMENT REACHED

ROME, March 10—Britain and Italy have reached a friendly settlement regarding the problem of seaborne supplies of German coal to Italy, it is announced here. The Italian Government had been under a misapprehension about the exact day on which Britain's declared intention of seizing all cargoes of German coal would be put into force.

The British Government is satisfied that this misapprehension was genuine and has agreed to release 13 Italian ships which are at present detained in British contraband control ports. Italy, for her part, has agreed to stop sending her colliers to certain ports in future and any colliers now in these ports will sail from them in ballast.

While this agreement was being concluded, the German Foreign Minister, Herr von Ribbentrop, was on his way here from Berlin. One reason for his visit here, it is believed, is to make a personal apology for the bombing and machine-gunning of the Italian steamer Amelia Lauro (5,335 tons) in the North Sea on Thursday night by German aircraft.

UNEXPLAINED BLACKOUT

AMSTERDAM, March 10—There was an unexplained blackout for two hours last night in Prague, Vienna and Munich, it is reported here. The wireless stations in these cities closed down for several hours.

RUSSIANS GAIN FOOTHOLD

HELSINKI, March 10—The Finnish authorities have admitted that Russian troops have gained a foothold near Viborg on the northwest shore of Viborg bay, but their position is very insecure and it is expected that they will be quickly forced back. The destruction of 18 more Russian tanks and several big guns is claimed today.

On the central and northern fronts the Finnish forces are reported holding their positions successfully. Northeast of Lake Ladoga Finnish ski troops have again been active.

The Finnish Foreign Minister, M. Tanner, questioned on the reported Soviet peace offers, said that if the Soviet terms of peace are not acceptable, Finland will fight on. There is no confirmation of the report that he is to leave for Berlin. Meanwhile, it is believed here that the former Finnish President, Dr. P. Svinhufrud, who is at present in Berlin, will follow Herr von Ribbentrop to Rome after he has had an interview with Herr Hitler.

FURTHER AID DISCUSSED

PARIS, March 10—The Council of Ministers yesterday discussed the question of further aid for Finland, it is announced here. The Allies, it is stated, are willing and ready to give much more help to Finland than they have already done.

FINN DELEGATES REACH MOSCOW

STOCKHOLM, March 10—Three members of a Finnish delegation have arrived in Moscow by air from Finland, it is reported here. They are believed to be discussing peace terms with the Soviet Government

The Russian terms are said to be not as far-reaching as had previously been supposed.

WELLES SUMMITS MEMORANDUM

PARIS, March 10—The United States Undersecretary of State, Sumner Welles, yesterday submitted to the Minister of Finance, M. Paul Reynaud, a memorandum on the United States' views on economic policy after the war, including the aim of international trade reconstruction on a healthy basis. M. Reynaud, on behalf of the French Government, expressed general agreement with those views, which he said, agreed with the Allies' aims.

WELLES IN LONDON

LONDON, March 10—Sumner Welles arrived here this evening from Paris by air. He was escorted by three French fighter aircraft and one Royal Air Force machine.

ARMISTICE SUGGESTED

WASHINGTON, March 10—The Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Key Pittman, in a broadcast last night described Sumner Welles' visit to Europe as a "splendid undertaking on the President's part." Now was the time, he said, for neutral nations to hammer away in the cause of peace. He suggested an armistice of 30 days, to give time for neutral mediation.

CAIRO COMMENT

CAIRO, March 9—The newspaper "Almokattah," in an article yesterday referring to the visit of Sumner Welles to Europe, declares that peace is impossible now for it would not last a quarter of a year compared with the Versailles peace, which lasted a quarter century. "Europe and the whole world must first be saved from a wicked and noxious element the like whereof the world has not suffered for many generations and which, if allowed to spread, will endanger all humanity, putting back humanity hundreds of years.

"Therefore, neither America nor other nations enjoying liberty and independence and possessing pride and honor will agree that the sword should be ruler of the world or brute force the judge of mankind."

FAILURE OF NEGOTIATION SEEN

RIO DE JANEIRO, March 9—The Brazilian paper O Jornal, referring to Sumner Welles' mission to Europe, points out the impossibility of Allied negotiations with "the Munich perjurer and a repeatedly faithless Government."

PRESS CONTROL BARED

AMSTERDAM, March 10—The methods by which the German press is controlled have been revealed in reports received here today. There is no censorship in German newspaper offices, but editors know that a first offence against the censorship regulations will get them into serious trouble. A second offence will land them in a concentration camp, with permanent dismissal from their positions and a fine equivalent to several months' salary.

Yamagishi, Miss Hibiya To Be Married Soon

Two of Japan's best known athletes will be married soon.

The engagement has just been announced of Miss Tatsuko Hibiya, 22, national women's sculling champion for the last three years, and Jiro Yamagishi, Japan's No. 1 tennis player, now a lieutenant in the Imperial Navy.

Having represented Japan for several years in the Davis Cup matches, Mr. Yamagishi is internationally known and considered one of the best players in the world today.

The wedding will take place in the spring after Mr. Yamagishi's graduation from the Navy's paymasters' course.

Bangkok Maru Incident Not Thought Important

Domei Tsushin

PARIS, March 9—The Foreign Office today received an official report from Hanoi on the circumstances attending the Japanese protest over the search and seizure of mail aboard the O. S. K. Bangkok Maru at Haiphong on March 5.

Commentators close to official sources said the incident was a local affair unlikely to involve major repercussions. They pointed out that the inviolability of postal correspondence provided by Article I of The Hague Convention refers only to mail found on vessels on the high seas and does not concern ships, such as the Bangkok Maru, which have voluntarily entered a belligerent port. In the latter case, the vessel in question automatically places itself under the rules of local jurisdiction, it was explained.

U.S. COPPER SALES TO REDS ARE DISCUSSED

Washington's Officialdom Surprised at Huge Report Of War Materials Exports

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON—State Department officials apparently were taken by surprise recently by news which developed recently to the effect that American exports of copper, an essential war material, to Russia have amounted to more in the last three months than in the preceding three years.

Although no official comment was obtainable, it was believed that some members of the Department may be taking notice of the situation and comparing it with the circumstances which earlier led to "moral embargoes" on airplanes, airplane parts, aviation gasoline, aerial bombs, molybdenum, and aluminum to governments whose armies engaged in bombing civilian populations.

MORAL EMBARGO LETTER

On December 15, which incidentally was the date of the last Finnish debt payment, the State Department made public a letter the Secretary had written to manufacturers of aircraft and munitions saying the Department hoped it would not receive any application for a license through the Munitions Control Board to export aircraft or accessories or bombs to countries whose armed forces were bombing civilians.

Five days later the Department announced it had called upon American oil companies to withhold plans, information, and technical assistance in producing aviation gasoline from countries using this type of warfare. Press reports have carried almost daily accounts during the last few weeks of bombing of open towns by Russian Fliers in Finland.

This policy dated back to a statement issued by the Secretary of State on December 2 after consultation with President Roosevelt. The statement read:

CONDEMN CIVILIAN BOMBING

"The American Government and the American people have for some time pursued a policy of wholeheartedly condemning the unprovoked bombing and machine-gunning of civilian populations from the air.

"This Government hopes, to the end that such unprovoked bombing shall not be given material encouragement in the light of recent recurrence of such acts, that American manufacturers and exporters of airplanes, aeronautical equipment, and materials essential to airplane manufacture, will bear this fact in mind before negotiating contracts for the exportation of these articles to nations obviously guilty of such unprovoked bombing."

VITAL TO GERMANY

Copper, according to one military source, is ranked as a strategic material in the case of Germany, which means that its supply might seriously affect the course of a war, and its importance to Russia may be only slightly less, since Russia produces less copper than it has been using in recent years.

This metal is indispensable in the making of cartridge cases for all small arms and machine-gun ammunition, for field artillery shells, and for timing bands or fuses on prejectiles. It also enters to a considerable extent into the construction of airplanes and motorcars, trucks or tanks for magnetoes, wiring, and in parts made of alloys. It would also be essential to the telegraphic and radio equipment of an army signal corps.

Although no official step is ready, assurances are given unofficially that all such potential war supplies "are being watched." Some check is being kept by at least three departments—State, War, and Commerce—and doubtless by the Munitions Control Board.

OFF FOR HONORS IN MANILA

Talent, Experience

the piano very well, and besides, as a hobby, she also plays the guitar. And in my opinion, the secret of artistic dancing is to be found only in a thorough understanding of music. What else is dancing than the human expression of music through the instrument of the body?"

Discussing the feasibility of Miss Kaitani's attempt to create a Japanese ballet with the technique of Western dancing, Mr. Ito explained that the literal meanings of the two Chinese characters forming the Japanese word for ballet, "buyo" suggested in themselves such a synthesis.

"The first character, 'bu,' pronounced in Japanese 'mai,' describes a movement in the air, in an ethereal, cosmic sphere. Japanese, and most Oriental, dancing, which is concentrated in small movements of the hands, lives chiefly in this sphere; it is a literary offshoot, essentially based on a mental conception. The second character, 'yo,' pronounced in Japanese 'odori,' describes a movement on the ground, in the animal sphere, and Western dancing, which is dominated by great movements of the feet, is more at home in that sphere; it is a musical offshoot, essentially based on emotional and physical conceptions.

"Now, the ideal 'buyo' should be a synthesis which combines the meanings conveyed by both Chinese characters, and it is this East-West synthesis which Miss Kaitani should accomplish in her school of dancing."

TWO MORE BALLETS

There will be two more ballets in the coming presentation at the Kabuki Theater, for which Miss Kaitani had the music especially composed by two young Japanese musicians. Kazuo Yamada, who is also a staff composer of the recently founded Kawana Gakugekidan, wrote the score for 'Jubaku,' a ballet in three parts, with an educational background; and Tadashi Hattori composed the music for 'kaze' (The Wind). Alternating with Noboru Kaneko, these two composers will also conduct the Concert Populaire orchestra, which will furnish the musical accompaniments for the performances.

Other numbers included in the forthcoming program are two solo dances by Miss Kaitani: de Falla's Danse de Feu, and Saint-Saens' The Dying Swan (cello solo by Yoritoyo Inouye, accompanied at the piano by Kazuo Yamada); and a solo dance by Miss Reiko Ogata: Brahms' Hungarian Dance Nr. 6. For the opening number, Miss Kaitani will present a group of her pupils in Spring Has Come, based on music by Edvard Grieg.

2 Italian Tennis Stars Coming Here in Fall

Two Italian topnotch tennis players will participate in the international meet of elaborate scale scheduled in the fall by the Japan Lawn Tennis Association as part of the celebration of the 2600th anniversary of the founding of the Empire.

Acceptance of its invitation by the Italian Tennis Association was received Thursday.

The well-known star, Stefani, considered the father of the two-handed technique, will be one of the two coming, it is said.

The Italians will play in Tokyo and the other big cities. Their arrival is expected in October.

Tatung Harbor

with a population of about 1,200,000, of whom 300,000 are expected to be Japanese.

FIRST PROJECT

One of the first projects to be launched in preparation for the merger of Antung and Tatung was the building of the so-called Hitler Highway for high-speed motor traffic, connecting Antung Station and Tatung Harbor via Santoulangtou. An asphalt highway 15 meters wide divided into two lanes, the road upon completion this May, according to Vice-Governor Horiuchi, will cut down the travelling time between Antung and Tatung to 20 minutes or so. Two or three years later the highway is to be expanded to 25 meters, with two lanes each for Antung-bound and Tatung-bound traffic. The road will be so constructed as to permit of an average speed of 120 kilometers per hour by eliminating curves and gradients. For 50 metres on both sides no building will be allowed.

The two greatest factors which assure Greater Antung a bright future are, as already mentioned above, is its rich hinterland of Tungpientao and its cheap and abundant supply of electricity. Seven huge dams built in the Yalu River over a distance of some 200 "ri" with reservoirs containing a total of 11,230,000 cubic meters of water will within 15 years supply Greater Antung and other planes in the Yalu River basin with 1,645,000 kilowatts of electricity. Construction of the largest of these dams, the Shuifeng Dam was started two years ago. This power plant will begin supplying 70,000 kilowatts of electricity toward the end of this year or early next year.

POWER PLANTS

Added to these Yalu River plants are the two power plants of the Hunkiang and Shachientzu, both under direct Manchoukuo management, with a total generating capacity of 340,000 kilowatts, and power plants run by caloric power projected in the Tungpientao will have at their disposal 2,540,000 kilowatts of electricity, which is likely to be supplied to them at the exceedingly low rate of one sen per kilowatt, as compared with 2.5 sen in Japan and 5 cent in the United States.

Finally, as to the hidden treasures of Tungpientao, such wealth of mineral deposits is, in the opinion of mining experts, found only in Central Asia, Canada and Africa. Only becoming known to the world in the last few years since the foundation of Manchoukuo, no thorough investigations have been conducted as to its hidden wealth, but what little has been explored warrants the most optimistic views as to the future of this industrial zone. One iron mine alone at Taitzu is estimated to contain iron ore totaling 78,000,000 tons, with an average iron content of 63 per cent. The Chitaokou mine's iron ore, 52 per cent pure, is estimated at 10,000,000 tons. A recently discovered iron ore extending some six miles in length north of Greater Antung has an average of 55.49 per cent iron, and in spots 62 per cent. This spectacular Find, according to Vice-governor Horiuchi, contains 15,000,000 tons of ore exposed to the surface in the pocket at Tangkangling alone.

COAL ABOUNDS

The Tungpientao area also abounds in coal deposits. The Tiehpitzu colliery's deposits are estimated at 55,000,000 tons, Wutoukiang's 70,000,000 tons, Patoukiang's 15,000,000, and the deposits at Yentungkou at 30,000,000 tons. It has been established that the vein at Yentungkou runs for about 70 kilometers to the north.

The industrial future of Manchoukuo undoubtedly depends upon the success of the exploitation of the hidden treasures of Tungpientao. In the forthcoming stages of industrial development, increasing efforts will in all probability be made for the opening up of this mineral area. For this the primary need of the moment is the construction of railways to transport the mined ores to established factory zones, as was pointed out by Mr. Shinji Yoshino, the vice-president of the Manchuria Industrial Development Company recently.

HSINKING TO STAGE CULTURAL EXHIBIT

Asuka and Nara Periods To Be Featured

Along with its many other projects in celebration of the 2600th anniversary of the Japanese Empire, the Manchoukuo Government will hold an Asuka, Nara Culture Exhibition in Hsinking and Mukden next month. The affair is to be held under the auspices of the Manchoukuo Central National Museum and the Japan-Manchoukuo Society.

Plans have progressed rapidly for assembling suitable material which will introduce the art and culture of Japan to the people there. Representative products relating to the architecture, industry and art of the two periods, Nara and Asuka in Japanese history will be on display.

One of the striking articles which will probably be on exhibition and which presented to the Manchoukuo Government is a collection of 12 photographs of a mural-painting of the famous Horyuji Temple in Nara.

Although the painting itself can be traced as a work of the Asuka period, the artist is not known. Four of the photographs are 10 feet square, which is the original size of the painting. These photographs depict drawings of the Amida Buddha, Kwannon and the Fugen Bosatsu. The remaining eight photographs are ten feet in length and five feet wide.

This collection of photographs was presented in a brief ceremony at the Manchoukuo Embassy Monday afternoon in the presence of Ambassador Yuan Chen-to, Viscount Okabe and other notables.

Joe Eagle Appears In Kansai Smoker Next Sunday Afternoon

Boxing fans of the Kansai are in for a rare treat on Sunday afternoon, March 17, at the Nishinomiya stadium, near Osaka, with the Fuji Boxing Club of Tokyo and the Kansai Boxing Club staging a double main event smoker.

Tsuneo (Piston) Horiguchi, featherweight champion, will take on Taro Aizawa of the Kansai in the one, while Joe Eagle of the Philippines will meet Sueo Ohashi of the Kansai in the other. Both are scheduled for ten rounds.

Eagle, who made a miserable showing last month in his bout against Horiguchi, is out to redeem himself.

Pro Ball Season To Open on Friday

The spring season of the professional baseball league will open on Friday at the Koshien stadium, near Osaka.

The nine member clubs will then make their official debut for the year in Tokyo on March 23 and engage in a tripleheader daily for nine days before adopting their simultaneous schedules in the Kansai and in Tokyo.

By their 4 to 3 victory over the Eagles, the Giants Tuesday clinched the series for the Mayor's trophy at the Korakuen stadium here.

LONDON WARMS TO JAPANESE AT TIENTSIN

Political Developments Since July Crisis Said Showing Modification of Antagonism

Domei Tsushin

TIENTSIN, March 12—The political developments in China since the enforced isolation of the British concession at Tientsin, especially the changes in the outlook brought about by the approaching establishment of a new Central Government under the leadership of Wang Ching-wei, seem to be ushering in a modification of Great Britain's China policy in order to cope with the altering situation.

The Concession authorities have come to take a more conciliatory attitude toward the Japanese, even after the failure of the Tokyo Conference, as in the instances of delivering the culprits in the Cheng Si-keng case and of cooperating with the latter in the apprehension of the anti-Japanese elements belonging to the Blue Shirt Society, so that the question pertaining to the maintenance of order within the limits of the Concession has nearly been solved at least in outward appearance.

It is true that Great Britain is continuing her support of the fapi, undoubtedly in behalf of the Chungking regime, but it should be pointed out at the same time that her own rights and interests, as things stand, are tied to the old currency system and that she is likely to persist in her present course on the assumption that its circulation will be tolerated by the new central regime during the period of transition.

A similar relaxation in the British attitude has been noted as regards the question of flour stocks in North China, concerning which the Concession authorities have devised a method of registering those under their control and facilitated their supply to the Chinese part of the city.

Some of the observers here, therefore, are taking the view that the British actions in these matters indicate a change of heart so as to remain on friendly terms both with Tokyo and Chungking.

In other words, they scan from the recent happenings the growing British loss of faith in the ability of the Chungking regime to maintain the old order by resisting the Japanese, and think that the British authorities are now seeking the settlement of the Concession dispute by somehow disposing the silver question and other economic issues.

T would ameliorate the Anglo-Japanese relations and would also give an opening for arranging a modus operandi with the new regime of China for the purpose of safeguarding the British rights and interests with the fapi as a sort of contact-point.

At any rate, the present policy of the British Government in this respect appears to suggest a change of tenor and is being welcomed in various circles of North China.

Yokohama to See Interport Sports

An active week-end program is scheduled at the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club. The Kobe K.R. and A.C. teams representing ladies' and gentlemen's badminton singles and doubles, as well as their strong rugby team will compete with Yokohama. Throughout Saturday and Sunday morning badminton matches will be played off.

At 2:30 p.m. Saturday, the rugby interport game will be played.

An interport dinner will be given at the Clubhouse at 8 p.m. Saturday.

On Sunday at 10:30 a.m. the Y.C. and A.C. soccer second team will play the Kanto Chemical Works team. In the afternoon at 2 o'clock the club's hockey second team will meet the Yokohama athletes, and at 3 o'clock the hockey first team will play the Tokyo University of Commerce.

All these activities will terminate with a tea dance.

Mt. Everest Expeditions

Mr. Morris then explained that it would be almost impossible to climb the mountain without the use of oxygen but again they were opposed to its use because a fifty pound container would be almost impossible to carry over the last 1,000 feet.

Having experienced three failures to conquer Mt. Everest, Mr. Morris upon his return to London had the opportunity of studying airplane photographs taken of Mt. Everest and he concluded that if the peak is as difficult to climb as the pictures make it appear, it will be impossible to conquer it unless conditions are perfect—And even then, chances are against any man climbing to the summit.

On his last expedition, Mr. Morris said that the only publicity of which he could be proud was the fact that he, perhaps, is the only man in the world to have gotten malaria in such a high altitude.

PEACE ON EARTH

Living for weeks in a small Tibetan village while he recuperated from the effects of the fever, Mr. Morris noticed that here were a people that were actually happy. Not encumbered by the conveniences of modern civilization, these people were able to get along without any feeling of jealousy.

Due to their social laws and family life, a Tibetan had no feeling of possession or jealousy. They were able to live simply and yet enjoy it. While polygamy was permitted, it was seldom practiced unless the first wife was unable to bear children.

After studying the Tibetans, Mr. Morris came to the conclusion that unless the modern world changes its ways, it will be unable to enjoy perfect happiness like these primitive peoples.

Olympic Games May Be Held After All in Finland

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, March 14—With the termination of Soviet-Finnish hostilities, athletic circles here today expressed the belief that Finland will hold the 1940 Olympics as scheduled.

Supporting this belief, Dan Ferris, Olympic and A.A.U. official, pointed out that the Finnish Olympic Committee recently announced that if the war is ended by April 1st, the Olympics would be held—that date being set as a dateline to declare whether the games are officially on or off.

BOND REWARDS ANNOUNCEMENT SCHEDULED

Will Be Made to China Affair Participants—And Assistants, Through March 31, 1939

The rewards for those who participated in the present China Affair and came away safe will be shortly announced for the first time, the scope being limited to those who joined the conflict from the outset of the Affair to March 31, 1939, (roughly estimated to exceed one million men), says the Hochi.

The Government, because of the need of issuing a large amount of national bonds to be given as rewards, is now preparing a bill and a supplementary budget necessary for Diet presentation.

The present rewards, according to the Hochi, will cover all participants of the war, including regular soldiers and sailors, civilians in the military and naval services, war correspondents and crews of transports. They also cover those behind the firing lines who greatly facilitated the warfront operations, both in the Government and outside.

The national bonds to be given as the rewards, will be in the owners' name. However, to facilitate cashing before maturity, the authorities will see to it that cashers can have their bonds exchanged "to bearers" through official agencies.

On the other hand, means is being considered by the Government, reports the Hochi, by which the bonds may remain long in honored houses after their terms of redemption have expired.

TRIAL OF ASSASSINS OF TSENG SET AT HANOI

First Anniversary of the Affair To Be Observed on March 21

Domei Tsushin

NANKING, March 14—On receipt of information to the effect that the trial of the assassins of the late Tseng Chung-ming, lieutenant of Wang Ching-wei, would be held next Monday at Hanoi, the Wang faction sent a telegram to the Hanoi Criminal Court, requesting that the Court mete out severe punishment against the assassins, it is learned today.

Tseng Chung-ming was assassinated about a year ago at Hanoi by assassins sent by the Chungking Government, having been mistaken for Wang Ching-wei.

The first anniversary of the death of Mr. Tseng falls on March 21, and the Wang faction is now making necessary preparations to hold a memorial service in Nanking for Mr. Tseng, who rendered valuable services for the cause of peace together with Mr. Wang and his faction.

Finn-Soviet Peace

Finland, to relieve the anxieties of Sweden and Norway.

What the immediate effect of peace on the relations of the Allied Powers with Germany will be, these quarters declared is a matter of great interest. Considering the heavy loss in prestige and military strength suffered by the Soviets in Finland, it was believed that Soviet pressure in Southern Europe and the Balkans cannot be expected for the moment. On the other hand, belief was expressed that Germany will redouble effort to make secure its economic position in the Balkans. The possibility was intimated that Germany may draw the Allied forces against the Soviet Union, so as to lessen the latter's direct pressure on the Reich.

ITALIANS WELCOME

Domei Tsushin

ROME, March 12—Authoritative quarters today welcomed the news of Russo-Finnish peace and hailed Finland's decision to cease fighting as a step toward preventing the spread of the European war. It was stressed that the Allies were ready to send troops to aid the Finns.

Otherwise, these sources did not comment on the effect of peace on general European situation.

BERLIN SATISFIED

Domei Tsushin

BERLIN, March 13—"It is an honorable peace," was the comment made today by authoritative Nazi circles here in describing the Soviet-Finnish peace agreement signed today at Moscow. After expressing satisfaction over the conclusion of peace these quarters declared, "It is too bad that so much blood was spilled, but it was a good thing that Finland did not listen to Mr. Chamberlain."

A Finnish Legation spokesman tonight insisted that the final word for peace or the continuance of war had not been received here. He added that he was awaiting the decision of the Finnish Parliament.

NEZU ART COLLECTION WILL BE DISPLAYED

Memorial Museum to Late Financier to Be Erected

The famous Oriental art collection of the late Kaichiro Nezu, noted financier who died on January 4, will be preserved and put on public display in a memorial museum which will be built in the near future.

The late Mr. Nezu is said to have spent ¥15,000,000 in 50 years to make the collection, which is held to be one of the best of the kind in the world. Its price is now estimated by some experts at ¥30,000,000 and by others at ¥50,000,000.

It includes "The Nachi Waterfall" by Kanaoka Kose, Japanese master painter of the ninth century, "Iris" by Korin Ogata, master of the early Tokugawa Era, paintings, Buddhist images and utensils of the Tang and Sung dynasties, all of national treasure merit.

When a selection of its ancient Chinese copper utensils was exhibited at a Chinese art show in London, it was claimed by experts to be the world's best collection of its kind.

At present the whole collection is housed in a warehouse in the Nezu residence at Aoyama Minamicho, Akasaka, Tokyo.

The plan of the museum will be made public by the Nezu family in the near future. On completion, it is expected to be Japan's most outstanding private museum.

Ribbentrop in Berlin

Domei Tsushin

BERLIN, March 12—German Foreign Minister Colonel Joachim von Ribbentrop, completing his highly important trip to Rome to confer with Italian leaders and Pope Pius XII, arrived here this evening by train from the Italian capital.

The Foreign Minister is expected to report to Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler tomorrow on his conversations with Premier Benito Mussolini and other Italian officials.

Pro Baseball Teams To Play in Manchoukuo

The Japan Professional Baseball Federation, now in its fifth year since its organization, will branch its activities out to Manchoukuo this year, according to announcement Thursday.

Under arrangements completed between the Federation and the Manshu Nippo, the nine member teams will play a total of 67 games in Dairen, Mukden and Hsinking during 20 days between the latter part of July and the middle of August.

The games will count in the season's standings, which will open today at the Koshien stadium, near Osaka.

Industrial Bank To Be Formed In Central Yangtze

Domei Tsushin

HANKOW, March 13—With a view to promoting the economic and industrial development of the Hankow-Wuchang district, Hupei province, the project to organize an industrial bank was adopted here today by the Preparatory Commission appointed for that purpose.

This new financial concern, which is to be known as the Central Yangtse Industrial Bank, will be the official organ of both provincial and the Hankow-Wuchang Special District Governments and will have the power to control and regulate the currencies in circulation, stimulate industrial enterprises there and also engage in the ordinary transactions of a commercial bank.

Its capital stocks will consist of 200,000 shares of ¥100 each, and the Provincial and District Governments will respectively take 50,000 shares out of this total number, while the remaining one half is to be offered for public subscriptions.

No Japanese capital, however, will be invited to participate in this purely Chinese organ.

The proposed bank, though limited to 30 years' existence, apparently taking into account its relationship with the prospective central monetary institution to be created by the new Government of China, will have its main office at Hankow and as many branch offices as considered necessary in various localities of the occupied territory.

It will open its business in the latter part of this month.

NEW HSINKING GUILD FORMALLY APPROVED

Medical Supplies Importers Group to Start Functions Soon

Domei Tsushin

HSINKING, March 13—The Manchoukuo Medical Supplies Importers Guild which was formed on March 8 has been given formal approval by the Civil Affairs and Finance Ministers, it was learned today.

The newly organized Manchoukuo Medical Supplies Importers Guild is expected to commence its business from about the beginning of April. The Kwantung Medical Supplies Importers Association is also expected to complete its organization by that time.

The Government is understood to be planning to have the Guild import and distribute medical supplies along the following line:

(1) The imported medical supplies are to be allotted by the Guild to the member importers on the basis of their past business results under the supervision of the Government.

(2) The import prices of medical supplies are to be fixed by the Guild. The prices are to be adjusted on the basis of the Export Control Ordinance of Japan.

(3) As the Export Control Ordinance of Japan is equally applicable to Manchoukuo and Kwantung, the Medical Supplies imported from Japan should be distributed in accordance with the joint decision of the Manchoukuo and Kwantung Medical Supplies Importers Guilds.

(4) Regarding the home distribution of imported medical supplies, the allotment to the member importers is left in the hands of the Government for restrictioning profits.

The Departments of Civil Affairs and Finance are understood to be taking a careful attitude toward the newly-organized Guild, in view of the fact that medical supplies are important daily necessities for the health of the people.

Welfare Ministry To Survey Energy Consumed by Workers

The Welfare Ministry will make a survey of energy consumed by laborers and factory workers engaged in prosperous industries as a preliminary to fix their appropriate wages, says the Asahi.

The survey is to be conducted of about 2,000 workers in 15 representative coal mines, copper mines, iron works, electric, spinning, machinery and airplane factories until the end of April. Yoshio Uyeno, an expert of industrial psychology, and Dr. Kazuo Furusawa, authority on labor physiology, of the Labor Science Research Institute, will direct the survey.

Each worker is to be examined as to the wages, working hours, rest hours, lunch-time, food and other details of their daily routine and how much energy he spends for a day's work. The examiners will figure out what kinds of food are needed to supply sufficient energy and what wages are appropriate for different kinds of work.

The officially fixed appropriate wages will be enforced about August.

RELICS TELLING HISTORY OF ITALIAN, JAPANESE AMITY TO BE SENT TO NAPLES

More than 100 photographs of documents and relics illustrating the 370-year-old history of Italo-Japanese friendship will be sent by the Japan-Italian Institute in Tokyo to an Italian overseas development show which will be held in Naples in May.

The Japanese contributions to the Italian show will be shipped on the N.Y.K. liner Hakusan Maru which leaves Yokohama on Sunday.

Outstanding among the photographs to be sent are those of documents concerning the Japanese mission sent by three Catholic daimyo of Kyushu, Omura, Otomo and Arima, about 360 years ago to the Vatican. There is also a reproduction of a parchment document brought to Japan by Padre Valiani, Italian priest who accompanied the Japanese mission when it returned from Rome to Kyushu.

Pictures of 28-centimeter guns made in Japan under the guidance of Major-General Pompeo Grillo, Italian benefactor to Japan's modern weapon manufacturing industry, which proved of great use in the capture of Port Arthur in the Russo-Japanese War are among those illustrating the Italo-Japanese relations in the Meiji Era.

Others include photographs of a portrait of the late Toshimichi Okubo, noted Meiji-era statesman, executed by Edoardo Chiosone, who was one of those who first introduced oil painting in Japan, and photographs showing the activities in Japan of the Fascist goodwill mission which visited Japan in 1933.

SHIMIZU HURLS NANKAI TO 2-0 WIN OVER EAGLES

Indications are that the lowly Nankai team last year will get somewheres this season in the Japan professional baseball league. Behind the two-hit pitching by Southpaw Hideo Shimizu, until recently with Meiji University, the squad whitewashed the Eagles 2-0 in the opening tripleheader of the 1940 season Friday at the Koshien stadium near Osaka.

A hit to right field by Pinchhitter Asano brought in Hankyu's winning run in the eighth inning for a 2-1 victory over the Giants.

Nagoya bumped two Lions for 15 hits to win by a 10-4 score in the other game.

The summaries:		R.	H.	E.
Nankai	000 100 01A	2	5	2

Batteries: Kameda and Kiyoiye; Shimizu and Yoshikawa.

Nagoya	000 400 006	10	15	3
Lions	010 000 102	4	11	3

Batteries: Muramatsu and Miura; Fukushi, Izutsu and Hirota.

Giants	000 001 000	1	4	2
Hankyu	000 100 01A	2	5	3

Batteries: Stalphin and Yoshiwara; Shigematsu and Hibino.

Beautiful Actress Dies

BERLIN, March 14—La Jana, internationally known dancer and actress, who was often described as the most beautiful woman in Europe, died here today at the age of 30 from inflammation of the lungs. She was born in Vienna and enjoyed her greatest success in the motion picture "Truxa."

NO CANS FOR BRITAIN

NEW YORK, March 14—England is no longer able to purchase canned fruits in the United States due to her foreign trade and foreign currency position, according to the press here. It also became known here that the British Government has advised certain banks that it could no longer grant credits for such purchases. In 1939, the United States exported canned fruits valued at $16,000,000 to Great Britain.

REICH-FINN PACT SIGNED

BERLIN, March 14—A German-Finnish trade agreement was signed here today according to Transocean. Under the new agreement, trade that had been paralyzed by the Soviet-Finnish war shall be revived.

The negotiations which had been carried on by official German and Finnish representatives were based on the German-Finnish trade treaty of 1935. This treaty provided a clearing agreement for export of Finnish lumber, copper and food to Germany in exchange for finished industrial products. This barter system is to commence at once.

SPAIN RENEWS CLAIMS

ROME, March 14—The Spanish press in Tangiers has resumed its campaign for materialization of Spanish claims in northern Africa, according to reports which were received here today. The Espana demands a solution of the border questions with France.

Hamuro, Yusa Reject Invitation from Hawaii

Tetsuo Hamuro, 1936 Olympic 200-meter breaststroke champion, and Masanori Yusa, former national 100 and 200-meter freestyle champion, both of whom are now appearing in exhibitions in Brazil, have been invited to compete in Hawaii by the Hawaiian A.A.U. but were unable to accept the invitation, according to information received by Domei.

The two swimmers have been making fast times in their performances in Brazil and are said to be doing much to stimulate interest of Brazilians in the sport.

of Punjab, which occurred at Coxton Hall yesterday. A meeting was held here today at which Indian Clubs and associations passed a joint resolution condemning the act and expressing their condolences to Lady Odwyer and the family. The Indian Students Union, the Moslem Society, the Hindu Association, the Parsee Association, representatives of the Moslem League and the Indian National Council and many others were represented.

In the House of Commons the Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, made a statement in answer to a question, in which he expressed the sympathy of the House to Lady Odwyer and family and wishes for the recovery of the wounded, who include the Secretary of State for India, Lord Zetland.

At Bow Street this morning an Indian subject was charged with the murder of Sir Michael. He was 37 years old and was described as an engineer resident in London. He said that he did not wish to kill anybody but had only fired the revolver as a demonstration.

INDIA CONDEMNS MURDER

DELHI, March 14—Leaders of all parties in India are unanimous in condemning the assassination of Sir Michael Odwyer. In the Council of State today the leader of the opposition moved a resolution condemning the attack and requesting the President to convey the deep sympathy of the House to Lord Zetland.

Mr. Gandhi has described the outrage as an act of insanity, and expressed the hope it would not have any political consequences.

In Calcutta the Prime Minister of Bengal declared that not merely India but the whole of civilized world stands aghast at the shooting. The whole of India he said will join in condemning this abominable murder.

Democracies Upheld

LAUSANNE, March 13—The Gazette de Lausanne stated editorially yesterday: "When listening to German wireless talks in Arabic one might almost believe that the Arabs desire nothing so earnestly as the collapse of the democracies as a preliminary to the realization of their aspirations. The truth is very different. The entire Arab peoples, from the Atlantic to the Caucasus and from the Mediterranean to the Indian Ocean, are on the side of the democracies in the present war."

POLISH AIRMEN READY

PARIS, March 14—The Polish Prime Minister, General Sikorsky, announced here today that the first Polish Air Squadrons will shortly join the French Air Army at the front. They will be followed a little later, he added, by Polish infantry units.

According to the Japanese, a man starts life anew when he reaches his 61st birthday. Mr. Hiranuma is at the right.

Woodruff Smashes Half-Mile Record

Domei Tsushin

HANOVER, New Hampshire, March 15—John Woodruff, long-legged, Negro 800-meter Olympic champion and former University, of Pittsburgh star, last night ran the fastest half-mile race in track history at Dartmouth University's indoor track and field carnival.

His world's record of 1 minute 47.7 seconds was 1.5 seconds faster than that of Sydney Wooderson, British bank clerk who established an unofficial outdoor world record mark of 1 minute 49.2 seconds for the 880-yard run on the Hotspur Park track, London, on August 20, 1938.

In a special handicap race, Jim Herbert of New York University, erased a 27-year old indoor mark for the 440-yard run in new record time of 48.4 seconds. He was paced by three men who were given handicaps.

Hamuro, Yusa Win In San Paulo Meet

Tetsuo Hamuro and Masanori Yusa, outstanding Japanese swimmers now on tour in Brazil, won the plaudits of the fans at San Paulo on Thursday night with impressive performances, according to a Domei dispatch.

Hamuro won the 200-meter breaststroke in 2 minutes 42.9 seconds while Yusa took the 100 and 200-meter freestyle events in 59.1 seconds and 2 minutes 14.9 seconds respectiely.

The races were held in a 25-meter pool and conditions were poor.

NEW YORK YANKEES TO BE SOLD TO COVER LATE OWNER'S TAXES

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, March 14—Negotiations for the sale of the New York Yankees baseball club, of the American League, world's champions during the past four years, are being conducted to raise the necessary cash for payment of inheritance taxes on the $50,000,000 estate of the late owner of the club, Jacob Ruppert, it was reported today.

The Ruppert estate reportedly is asking $7,000,000 for the club.

Governor Francis P. Murphy, of New Hampshire, head of the syndicate intending to purchase the club, today confirmed reports that preliminary negotiations have been agreed upon, but that details are not yet completed.

It also was reported that the syndicate is believed to include among others, the United States Ambassador to Britain, Joseph P. Kennedy, and former Mayor of New York City, "Jimmy" Walker. Postmaster General James Farley, also is linked with the syndicate.

Oldest Pullman Car In United States Is Sold for Junk

Christian Science Monitor

OGDEN, Utah—The oldest Pullman car in use in the United States was recently dismantled and sold for junk here. It had seen 55 years service—28 on the road and 27 as a dormitory car for Pullman conductors who made overnight stops in Ogden.

When built in 1884 the car was one of the finest of its time and cost about $38,000, said Ray Smith, Ogden Pullman agent. But it sold for a nominal $1 to the Wheelwright Construction Company which wrecked it and sold the parts.

During its more than half a century the venerable sleeper carried two names and a number, first the Parthenon, then renamed the Pandita, and finally just plain No. 5067.

Following its retirement from the road the car was brought to Ogden, May 2, 1912. In those days conductors' runs between Chicago and California were divided here. As a result the car's 24 berths were filled every night.

However, with the lengthening of conductors' runs (they now work straight through from Chicago to the Pacific Coast) the car has had little use in recent years. At present only four conductors, have night layovers here, and so when the old car became out of repair officials decided to part with it.

The history of one of the Pullman Company's important safety and comfort inventions was closely connected with this particular car. The invention was the closed vestibule, an outgrowth of a Pullman patent to prevent cars from telescoping.

The new invention, with the glass doors, was installed on the old Parthenon in 1887, three years after it was built. It was placed on other cars too, of course, but as years went on the others dropped out of service and the old car at Ogden was finally the only one owned by the Pullman Company with one of the original vestibules. This same vestibule was exhibited at the Chicago fair two years ago and then was placed on exhibition in the Chicago Museum of Science and Industry.

Among outdated construction features in the car were two-piece wheels consisting of metal plates bolted to steel tires. The car's interior was finished in solid mahogany, not veneer, and its buffet counter had a marble top.

Japan Unlikely To Send Delegation Even If Games Held

Japan will not participate in the 12th Olympic Games in view of the present situation in the Orient even if Helsinki stages it, now that there is peace between Finland and Russia, according to present indications.

Directors of the Japanese Amateur Athletic Federation are said to be of the unanimous opinion that Japan should not go to the expenditures of sending a delegation to Helsinki this year.

Argentine Naval Training Ship Sailing for Japan

Domei Tsushin

BUENOS AIRES, March 14—Carrying a full complement of young midshipmen, the Argentine naval training vessel La Argentina will leave port here during the latter part of this month on another one of her lengthy annual training cruises to Japan, it was disclosed today.

The Japanese Minister here, Iwataro Uchiyama, tomorrow is scheduled to tender a farewell party to the captain and officers of the departing vessel.

WAKABAYASHI PITCHES TIGERS TO 3-0 VICTORY

Masterful pitching by Captain Tadashi Wakabayashi, former Hosei University star twirler and a Honolulu boy, was instrumental for the Tigers' 3 to 0 victory over the Giants in Sunday's tripleheader of the professional baseball league at the Koshien stadium, near Osaka. He yelded only five scattered hits.

Wakabayashi's battery mate was Yoshio (Kaiser) Tanaka, former Asahi's star of Honolulu, who was unable to play for the Tigers last year, down with pleurisy. He has completely recovered and it will be no surprise if he should be one of the driving factors for the team's march to the championship this year.

Figuring prominently in Sunday's games was another Hawaii product, Shigeichi Hasegawa, who arrived recently. Pitching his first game for the Eagles, he checked the Senators to four hits to help his team to a 2-1 victory at Kobe.

The summaries follow:

Dolfins	000 300 000—3	8	4
Lions	102 002 10a—6	8	2

Batteries: Furutani and Nagashima; Kikuya and Hirota.

Giants	000 000 000—0	5	2
Tigers	011 010 00a—3	4	0

Batteries: Nakano and Yoshiwara; Wakabayashi and Tanaka.

The summaries of two games played the same day at Kobe follow:

Eagles	002 000 000—2	7	2
Senators	000 000 010—1	4	2

Batteries: Hasegawa and Kiyoiye; Kaneko, Asaoka and Sato, Kojima.

Nankai	201 000 000 00—3	14	1
Senators	020 000 100 00—3	6	2

Batteries: Amagawa, Shimizu and Yoshikawa; Noguchi and Kojima.

WOULD EVALUATE PUBLIC APPEALS TO CONGRESSMEN

Dean Knapp, Syracuse University, Will Evaluate Letters Sent to Members Under New Project

N.Y. Times

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Seeking a greater understanding of the present "write your Congressman" habit and development of a formula whereby legislators can evaluate floods of mail to which they are frequently subjected, A. Blair Knapp, dean of men and instructor in political science at Syracuse University, is making an analysis of communications received by Representative Clarence Hancock of the Thirty-fifth New York District.

Selected for the study is the material received by Mr. Hancock from his constituents during consideration of the amendment of the Neutrality Act in a special session of the Seventy-sixth Congress. Included are letters, telegrams, postcards, petitions and many printed appeals circulated in the Protestant churches of Syracuse.

In turning over the mass of correspondence for study, Mr. Hancock explained that this form of appeal to members of Congress had reached such proportions that Representatives were confused by it and that some method was needed for evaluating it so that legislators could determine quickly the extent to which it should receive attention.

CONDITIONS FOUND CHANGED

Dean Knapp has undertaken the study because of its importance in the field of legislation which he regards as the key process in representative government since the manner in which policies and programs are formulated really determines whether the government is a representative one in accord with democratic theory.

"In early days of American legislative history members of Congress were to a large extent 'trustees' for their constituents. Communication was poor. The Congressman who went to Washington was pretty much 'on his own.' He had to justify his behavior to the home folks on his return, but while in Washington he was largely free from interference," says Dean Knapp.

"In later years this has been changed. Increasingly our legislators have become 'agents' of their constituents or some portions of them. First the lobbyist and the pressure group began to demand his services, and now individual constituents write, wire or telephone, demanding, pleading, scolding or reasoning with their Representatives, giving clear evidence of the growth of the concept of agency subordinating the conecpt of trusteeship in representation."

Dean Knapp is critical of the "write your Congressman" procedure, believing that it puts the Representative on the defensive, subjects him to pressure before he has had a chance to decide the merits of an issue, gives "mobocrats" undue opportunity to exert influence, and tends to break down the Republican form of representation by encouraging direct action.

LITTLE PRECEDENT FOR STUDY

Since his will be a pioneering study, Dean Knapp has little precedent to follow in his study which he expects to evolve slowly as the work proceeds. His first approach is that of classifying the material as to type, whether it is a petition, personal letter, telegram, etc., and as to the sender. The latter will be classified by age, sex, pary affiliation, occupation, religion, rural or urban residence, etc.

Another basis of classification will be the method of approach of the communication, whether it is demanding, pleading, reasoning or threatening. Other facts which the study proposes to determine will include:

Extent to which the stereotyped phrases of the formal petitions appear in personal letters and the sources of these phrases.

Extent to which dates of the communications coincide with those of appeals through press, radio or pulpit.

Pressure groups to which senders of appeals belong.

Degree to which the communications received are representative of the constituency.

Eagle Beats Ohashi In Nishinomiya Smoker

Joe Eagle of the Philippines, who was almost chased out of Tokyo last month for his miserable showing against Tsuneo (Piston) Horiguchi, stepped into the winning column Sunday at the Nishinomiya stadium, near Osaka, by winning the decision over Ohashi of the Kansai in ten rounds.

Joe Eagle weighed in at 127 pounds and Ohashi at 126 pounds.

In the other 10 rounder, Horiguchi took a decision over Taro Aizawa of the Kansai. They both weighed in at 126 pounds.

U.S. TRAVELERS TURNING SOUTH FOR VOYAGES

Peru Viewed As Safe Haven For Tourists During European War; Many Features Listed

By RICHARD W. DUNLAP

N.Y. Herald Tribune

The fact that vacation travel by Americans at present is confined by necessity largely to the Western Hemisphere has aroused new interest in the history and the present accomplishments of the countries of Latin America, as well as in the holiday advantages of the United States. Peru has a prominent place in current travel programs, not only because of its romantic past and splendor of scene but because it is one of the most progressive of the South American nations and one of the most hospitable in its reception of visitors from the North.

Modern transportation facilities have brought the land of the Incas and the conquistadores within the travel time of many American vacationists, and the bookings of ship and air lines indicate that an increasing number of travelers are taking advantage of the opportunity to explore one of the most genuinely interesting lands in the Western world.

FROM ALASKA TO CAPE HORN

An enterprise that has appealed to the imagination of all peoples, from Alaska to Cape Horn, has been the building of international highways that will link all the intervening countries by a vast motor highway system. Much remains to be done, but much already has been accomplished. The most recent news in connection with the project is the recent announcement that Peru has completed a three-year road-building program that provides an important link in the future All-American Highway.

The Peruvian highway development provides thoroughfares not only from the northern to the southern borders of the country along the seacoast but from the coastal cities to those in the interior, some of them over the mountain areas to the ancient Inca cities of the Andes. Many hitherto remote regions have been made easily accessible in recent years by new motor roads, by railroads and by air services.

The importance of the new highways in encouraging travel throughout South America is illustrated by the "race against time," held last fall under auspices of the Touring and Auto Club of Peru, during which motorists made the journey from Lima to Buenos Aires, a distance of 3,010 miles over the Andes, in 96 hours. The route was for the most part over the southeastern section of the Pan-American Highway, through Ica, Arequipa; Puno and Desaguadero, in Peru; La Laz, Oruro, Sucre, Potosi and Villazon in Bolivia, and La Quica, Salta, Tucuman, Cordoba and Rosario to Buenos Aires in Argentina.

There are regular services to Peru from the United States by ship and plane. The Grace Line schedules provide frequent sailings by sea and Pan American Grace Airways a faster service by air. Within the country, in addition to the new highways, there have been many improvements in recent years in local transportation.

HARVEST FESTIVALS SOON

At this time of the year the visitor in Peru will find every one enjoying the summer weather of the southern land and preparing for the celebration of the harvest festivals that will begin soon in all the Indian villages. They are among the most picturesque ceremonies of the kind in this part of the world. The celebrations, which last several days, are characterized by colorful costumes, native dances of ancient origin and much feasting. Few of the festivities are planned in advance, for the Indians hold fiestas at any time.

The summer season is at its height at present in Peru, and travelers who recently returned report that the fashionable beach resorts near Lima are enjoying one of their best seasons in many years. Among the more popular in the suburbs of the city are Chorrillos, with its cliff promenade and casino and good swimming and boating; Barranco and Miraflores near by, and La Herradura, a little farther from the city. Another popular resort is Ancon, about twenty-five miles from Lima, which has a casino, good resort hotels and excellent facilities for beach and land sports.

Lima, the capital, has many traditions of the early Spanish conquerors of the Inca empire, but as a modern city it offers every facility of comfort to the present-day tourist. Near the buildings of the oldest university in the Western Hemisphere—founded seventy-five years before Harvard, and the ancient Spanish churches and public buildings, are the most modern hotels, night clubs, restaurants and shops and centers for all types of athletic events. True to the Peruvian tradition as a mine of wealth in the days of the Spanish Main, the capital today has many shops of silversmiths which are mines of delight for all interested in silverware and antiques.

EXCURSIONS TO INCA CITIES

Many delightful excursions for tourists are available in the vicinity of Lima, some of them taking the explorers into the Andes and the old cities of the Incas. Farther south is Arequipa, a rendezvous of artists and writers and an entry to the Inca land about the ancient imperial City of Cuzco.

Arequipa, the second largest city in Peru, has been described as "a city of sunshine, of everblooming flowers, of marvelous views and a perfect climate." It has a spectacular setting, 7,600 feet above sea level at the foot of three dramatically beautiful, snow-covered peaks, among the highest on the continent.

Not far from Arequipa is Lake Titicaca, on the border between Peru and Bolivia, the highest navigable body of water in the world.

Cuzco, the century-old capital of the Inca Empire that the Spaniards invaded 400 years ago, is an overnight journey by rail from Arequipa. Today's Cuzco is a medieval city built upon the ruins of the ancient buildings of the Inca capital. Its Indian palaces share with the structures of ancient Egypt and the temples of Aztec Mexico the honor of remaining the most impressive monuments of vanished civilizations.

LARGE FLOWER BLOOMS MADE BY U.S. SCIENCE

'Tetraploid' Marigolds Developed By Use of Colchicine; Voice Tones Put on Paper at New York

By Herbert B. Nichols

Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK—Exposing flower seeds to different types of radiation has produced a number of sports or mutations, plants sometimes quite different from their parents. The latest experiments in the breeding of novel plants have resulted in new Burpee "Tetraploid" Marigold, the first new flower resulting from the use of a chemical for reproduction from seeds. Dorothy Lamour, film star, was presented with the first bouquet at her new New York apartment.

The flower was developed by doubling the chromosomes of the Guinea Gold marigold. The feat was accomplished by treating the marigold with colchicine, a chemical extracted from the bulb of the common autumn crocus.

LEAD-PENCIL SPEAKS

In Miami, Fla., a small group of motion picture engineers gathered to hear the first successful attempt to manufacture speech for motion picture sound tracks by hand and without any aid from the human voice. The discovery, upon which patents have been obtained, came when technicians noted that many of the markings on the normal motion picture sound track were alike.

Some of these were duplicated by free-hand drawings, which were then photographed and projected. They gave sounds which could not be distinguished from the human voice. According to Dave Fleischer, in whose studio experiments are being conducted, this means that distinctive voices can be built up by artists for animated cartoon heroes and heroines in keeping with their screen characters, and it will also be possible to form musical compositions outside the range of the human voice.

Europeans traveling through the American countryside are likely to be shocked by the weediness of our fields and fence rows, but what the European does not realize very often is that, with the exception of the sunflower, a great many of the more conspicuous weeds have been introduced from Europe and find our climate and soil conditions much more to their liking.

Explaining the relative weediness of American farms, L. W. Kephart, weed specialist of the Department of Agriculture, said that farms averaging about 100 acres for every worker do not allow for such close weed control as in the more intensively cultivated areas of Europe. Furthermore, he said, many of the conspicuous weeds are annuals, and are not serious. The serious weeds are the perennials that are difficult to destroy even by cultivation.

ATMOSPHERIC PULSE

According to Dr. C. G. Rossby, United States Weather Bureau, there is a long-period pulse beat in the earth's atmosphere which causes an increase in the activity of the air-circulation once every six or seven weeks. This causes more active movements of air masses, he says, and has a very important effect on weather, particularly upon the speed and direction of the "polar" fronts or edges of polar atmosphere that break away from their Arctic home and bring cold waves to southerly latitudes.

At meetings of the American Physical Society, J. V. Givens, Otto Beeck, and E. C. Williams of the Shell Development Company in Everyville, Calif, announced the discovery of compounds of phosphorus and arsenic which, when added to lubricating oil, reduces frictional wear about one fifth of the usual degree.

BIRD WALKS ORGANIZING

The Bulletin of the Brookline (Mass.) Bird Club (which is in no sense a local organization) gives members and all bird lovers who may wish to take part information concerning the weekly and holiday bird walks to be organized in Massachusetts from now until May 7. Under the guidance of competent leaders, good bird locations at Marblehead Neck, Plum Island, Rock Meadow, Nahant, Gloucester, Arnold Arboretum, Squantum, Wayland, Weston, Lynnfield Marshes, Concord, Ipswich, and many other places, will be visited. All who are interested are invited to go. Raymond Talbot of South Lincoln, Mass., is President.

Dr. Fritz Zwicky begins a new survey of the skies this year for supernovae, or giant exploring stars. In December he discovered his twelfth such star, and thus ended the first phase of a search that has kept his 18-inch Schmidt camera mounted on Palomar Mountain busy almost every clear night since early 1936. Twelve supernovae, or new stars located in distant galaxies, were two more than he expected to find. The dimmest of these was 6,000,000 times brighter than our sun.

Some soldiers operate the guns, others the light plant, and others are cooks, clerks, telephone operators, laundrymen, hospital orderlies, and mechanics. There is even an air-conditioning expert.

Officers have individual rooms, and a vaulted, mirror-hung mess room. They work in offices that resemble those of a small factory.

The troops sleep in dormitories, each containing 10 or 12 bunks in tiers. Dormitory walls are decorated with sweethearts, and magazine likenesses of actresses and bathing beauties.

Bathing, incidentally, is an important item in the life of the Maginot Line. Because of the necessarily close contact of vast numbers of men, special emphasis has been placed on all sanitary arrangements.

LAUNDRY EVERY WEEK

There are shower rooms with hot and cold running water, steam laundries within the forts do every man's wash at least once a week. Every tort has water from artesian wells drilled beneath it and reservoirs inside.

Each group is quartered near the gun to which it is assigned. Each unit can be isolated from the rest of its fortress in case of necessity, and has enough food and ammunition to last for weeks.

Rikkyo Wins Title In O.B. Rugby Play

Rikkyo won the championship of the Kanto O.B. (old boys) rugby league Sunday afternoon at the Meiji Shrine stadium by defeating Waseda, 17 to 3, for its fourth victory and a clean sweep in the schedule.

A better forward line proved the winning factor for Rikkyo.

Rikkyo scored two goals to lead 10-3 at half-time. A drop goal and a try accounted for Rikyo's seven points in the second half.

Meiji tied itself for third place with Waseda and Keio by defeating the latter, 27-18, with one victory.

The Gakushi team finished in second place with three victories and one defeat.

KEIO FAVORED TO RETAIN TITLE IN SPRING SERIES

With only First Baseman Iijima missing from its first string through graduation, Keio is believed to have a good chance to retain its championship in the forthcoming spring season of the Tokyo Six University Baseball league.

The pitching staff of Righthanders Takagi and Shiraki and Lefthander Takatsuka remains intact, which is the principal reason Keio is favored to repeat. It was Takagi that slowballed his team to victory over Waseda last fall.

Backstops Inouye and Kondo will be back on the job. Inouye is a little bit of a fellow but has a good peg to second and is a heavy hitter. He is especially dangerous in the pinches.

Matsumori, who has been a substitute catcher, and Iwamoto will be out fighting for the guardianship of first base. Iijima's hitting will be missed. His fielding was nothing to rave about. He was particularly weak on low thrown balls, letting one bounders go through him from time to time.

INFIELD INTACT

The rest of the infield, Miyazaki at second, Uno at third and Odate at shortstop, remains for another season. Odate is the league's best shortstop and one of the best hitters. Uno is just about ripe to develop into the best third sacker in the circuit. He too is a good man with the stick. Miyazaki is the weakest of the trio but he is a fast man on the bases.

Manager Morita has nothing to worry about so far as his outfield is concerned. Kawase, without a peer when it comes to chasing flies and base running, will be back at center and will be lead-off man on the offense. Heavy hitting Kusumoto will be in right field. Nezu and Nakada will take care of left field.

It has been a different story with Waseda. Through graduation, it has lost five regulars. They are: Shortstop Murase, Pitcher Kondo, Centerfielder Miyoshi, Rightfielder Kimura and Catcher Ogusu. Manager Itani, who recently succeeded Tanaka, has a tough job on his hands, but the opportunity is there for him to show his ability. He is lucky to have Ishiguro back. When he is going right, there isn't a better pitcher in the league. Ono, a good hitter, will catch. He has improved considerably and the loss of Ogusu will not be felt.

The other regulars back are Second Baseman Kakijima, Third Baseman Minamimura and Centerfielder Asai. Minamimura has been one of the leading hitters of the league. There isn't a gamer player than Asai, who is very dangerous when he gets on the bags.

Outstanding candidates for the other regular berths are Shikata for shortstop, Matsui for left field and Kajikawa for right field.

Meiji has suffered little from graduation. Shimizu, the league's best southpaw for several years, is no longer with the team, but in Righthander Fujimoto, it has an excellent pitcher. Then there is Kodama, who takes care of first base, but is without exception the best relief hurler in the league. There is a wealth of material for the backstop position with Mikoshiba, Matsui, Tsukakoshi and Kamihayashi all ready to don mask and protector. Matsui probably will be most called upon.

KAMEDA IS CAPTAIN

When Kodama is pitching, Kato will be at first. Shigeo Kameda captain, who hails from Hawaii and is a brother of Pitcher Ted Kameda of the Eagles and Pitcher Toshio Kameda of the Tigers of the professional league, should have a great season. He is without question the best fielding second baseman in the circuit but his hitting has been weak. With a little more confidence, he should be able to hit. Yasui will be third and Ase at shortstop.

Kato, Yano and Ito will comprise the outfield. Kato and Ito are reliable with the bat.

Rikkyo's success will depend on the showing of the battery composed of Saigo on the firing end and Machida on the receiving end.

Hosei seems to be in for another listless season.

Tokyo Imperial has a big hole to fill with its one-man pitching staff of Yutani gone via the graduation route. There is as yet no player showing any signs of assuming the roles in the past of Kubota, who did all the pitching, and Yutano who followed him.

National League Stars Beat American Loop, 2-1 in Benefit Game

Domei Tsushin

TAMPA, Florida, March 17—The National League All-Stars today eked out a 2-1 victory when they defeated the American League All-Stars in an exhibition baseball game to raise funds to be used for Finnish relief.

Outstanding stars picked from the cream of the major league spring training camps in Florida took part. The game was closely played, and the Nationals managed to drive in the winning tally in the last of the ninth inning.

The summary:

American	010 000 000	1	5	2
National	000 100 001	2	6	1

Batteries: American: Ruffing (N.Y.), Newsom (St. Louis), Leonard, Feller (Cleveland), and Dickey (N.Y.), Ferrell (Washington), Hemsley (Cleveland). National: Derringer (Cincinnati), Higbee (Chicago), Hamlin (Brooklyn), Walters (Cincinnati), Gumbert (N.Y.), and Danning (N.Y.), Lopez (Boston).

CHUNGKING REDS TRYING TO CHECK PRO-U.S. MOVES

Strong Representations To Chiang Seen Attempts For Retaining Influence

Domei Tsushin

HONGKONG, March 17—The strong representations made by the central headquarters of the Chinese Communist Party to General Chiang Kai-shek regarding future industrial and financial dealings between the Chungking Government and foreign countries have proved extremely shocking to leaders of the Chungking Government.

Various reports from Chungking combine to indicate that the main motive inspiring the unexpected representations by the Yenan authorities on the heels of the termination of the Soviet-Finnish war was that the Communist Party encouraged by the conclusion of the Soviet-Finnish peace is taking advantage of the deepening internal dissensions in the ranks of the Chungking Government to obstruct proposed American-Chinese collaboration and to deal a hammer blow to pro-American politicians.

Dr. Chauncey Kung, Dr. Wang Chung-hui, Dr. Wang Cheng-ting and other members of the pro-American group gaining strength on the extension of additional 20 million U. S. dollars credit to China are endeavoring to take further steps toward pro-Americanism through the American Ambassador to China, Nelson T. Johnson who is now staying in Chungking.

Most reliable information indicates that Chungking authorities are continuing various maneuvers to expand the $20,000,000 credit to $50,000,000 or $100,000,000. It is stated that Kung Hsiang-hsi, Weng Wen-hao and others are working out a plan for launching a large-scale American-Chinese joint enterprise to produce tin and copper, and usher in American capital for development of mines in Yunnan province and that they now are earnestly asking American Ambassador Johnson to offer his good offices in materializing this plan.

In contrast with the pro-American maneuvers, Feng Yu-hsiang, Shao Li-tzu and other pro-Soviets backed by the Soviet Ambassador to China, M. Panoushkin, are pushing Sun Fo to the fore and claiming the strengthening of Soviet-Chinese cooperation on all available occasions.

As it is, however, the influence of the pro-Soviet faction at present is compromising. As there are signs that General Chiang Kai-shek who ostensibly is manifesting a neutral role is inwardly siding with the pro-American group, the pro-Soviet faction is apt to be overwhelmed by the former, especially since the conclusion of the new American-Chinese credit agreement.

KAMEDA HURLS NO-HIT NO-RUN TILT FOR EAGLES

A no-hit no-run game, the ambition of all pitchers, was the feat of Ted Kameda of the Eagles in his 5-0 triumph over the Lions in Monday's tripleheader of the professional baseball league at the Nishinomiya stadium, near Osaka. It was the fifth registered in the circuit since its organization five years ago.

Kameda, who hails from Hawaii, was not altogether too good with his control as he issued nine passes to first. Interspersed with a strike out he walked three men in the second inning. He walked two men in succession in the third, and had the Lions waited him out a bit more, it is possible that they might have pushed over a run to avert a shutout defeat.

The Dolfins sprung a surprise by taking the Eagles into camp by a 5-2 count. They bunched three hits in a row to score five runs in the eighth inning.

Behind the two-hit pitching by Victor Stalphin, the Giants blanked the Nankai squad, 4-0, in the other game.

The summaries follow:

		R	H	E
Lions	000 000 000	0	0	2
Eagles	500 000 00a	5	7	2

To give closer attention to the promotion of people's welfare, a new section will be established in the Department of People's Welfare to stabilize and to improve the life of the people. In line with this policy, Government doctors will be stationed throughout the country at State expense, and isolation hospitals to confine patients with infectious disease will be established. Concerning execution of the opium crusade, a new appropriation has been made to carry out this year's program of the ten year opium eradication policy.

(6) Replenishment of local administration—Various Government measures have been devised to strengthen the structure of local government and for the thorough enforcement of Government measures and for the extension of efficient administration even to the remotest regions.

The total of the general and special accounts is 2,598,782,703 yuan in revenue and 2,501,030,054 yuan in expenditure. As these sums include those appropriations which are duplicated in several acounts, the net budget amounts to 1,651,843,000 yuan in revenue and 1,639,862,000 yuan in expenditure, marking an increase of about 600,000,000 yuan over the net estimates for revenue and expenditure for 1939.

Examining the figures for 1940 fiscal year budget, we note first the increase in revenue. In the general budget, as much as 417,000,000 yuan, or 73 per cent of the total of 573,555,000 yuan, to be obtained in the ordinary accounts without resorting to any special measures. The tax revenue is estimated at 323,853,000 yuan, a marvelous increase by approximately 120,000,000 yuan over the preceding year's estimate.

Parallel with domestic taxes, the customs tariff and the consumption tax also show corresponding increases, while Government enterprises are calculated to realize 30 per cent more profit than in 1939. The most noticeable point in this connection is the South Manchurian Railway Company's contribution to the State coffers in the form of compensation from next year onward, which adds about 15,000,000 yuan to the ordinary revenue of the Government.

Another encouraging sign is that through careful retrenchment, the surplus has been increased from 20,000,000 yuan to 30,000,000 yuan during the past year, while the bond issue of 75,000,000 yuan represents an increase of only 10,000,000 yuan over the 1939 budget. The total bond issue including both special and general accounts has been limited to 500,000,000 yuan.

In view of the fact that Manchoukuo has shown phenomenal growth since its establishment eight years ago, it is only natural that its budget should be increased in line with the rapid development of the country. We may add that the figures in the growing budget are an accurate indicator of the remarkable progress going on in the new State.

However, it is a mistake to think that the Government has compiled its budget on such optimistic grounds alone. As the result of great efforts made by the Government to maintain finances on a sound and safe basis throughout the remarkable economic growth of the country, the policy of sound finances has been unswervingly adhered to, while making courageous provisions for the development of Manchoukuo as an important unit in East Asian economy.

In compiling the new budget, the Government gave full studies to the matter of supply of commodities and concerning materials required for the execution of the projects which appropriation has been made in the present budget, an exhaustive survey has been made in relation to the execution of this year's commodity and material mobilization. Parallel to this, attention is also being given to the supply and demand of labor and to the system of labor administration, while the three principal factors in national economy, money, material and labor are being coordinated by wisely managed control.

With the successful execution of these measures and with the cooperation of the people, who can bear the extent of increased burden easily, we may look forward to a smooth operation of the 1940 fiscal year budget.

FENSKE BREAKS WORLD MARK FOR 3-4 MILE

Domei Tsushin

CHICAGO, March 17—Chuck Fenske, former Wisconsin track star, tonight added another title to his string, when he established a new new world's indoor record of 2 minutes 59.7 seconds to win the three-quarter mile race on the Chicago Field House dirt track at the 12th annual Armour Tech Relays.

Fenske's performance bettered the time of 3 minutes 1.2 seconds set last Thursday by John Borican, colored Shore A. C. runner, at the Dartmouth Carnival, and also the world's outdoor record of 3:00.6 set in 1931 by Jules Ladoumegue of France.

A. A. U. officials, however, were skeptical concerning the acceptance of the mark, since Fenske was paced by two Wisconsin runners.

TIES RECORD

LONG BEACH, California, March 17—Clyde Jeffery, of Stanford University, today equaled the 100-yards world record of 9.4 seconds at the annual Long Beach Relays which was held here.

Although the runners in the race were aided by a sharp wind, officials stated that the mark will be accepted, because the wind velocity was less than two miles per hour, the maximum allowance for the official recognition of any marks.

Matsuyama Retains Title

Kinrey Matsuyama, national three-cushion billiards champion, defeated Koya Ogata of the Kansai, 200 to 170 points, on the 339th cue, in a two-day challenge match ending Sunday at the Hankyu Kaikan at Sannomiya, Kobe.

Ogata was runner-up in the recent national championships.

Castle to Be Remodelled

Azuchi Castle in Shiga prefecture, which was built by Oda Nobunaga, famous Japanese warrior, about 40 years ago, is now said to be in a sad state of deterioration and the Shrine and Temple section of the local prefectural office will shortly start remodelling work. The expense is to be borne by the Home Ministry which will issue a grant in aid.

Work on Shijo Bridge Starts

KYOTO—Reconstruction work on the Shijo Bridge, one of the most famous landmarks here, was started on March 17 by local municipal authorities and all traffic for the time being will be directed over a temporary bridge. The undertaking is expected to be completed in May, 1942.

Churchill, Margaret Sullivan and Jane Wyatt, all of whom are now Hollywood stars. Others in the original cast who found their way to Hollywood include Caesar Romero, Constance Collier, Judith Wood (Mrs. Wren) and Sam Levine.

In the film version the part being taken by Mrs. Egerton was played by Billie Burke, that being played by Mr. Wills by Lionel Barrymore, Marie Dressler took the part being handled by Mrs. Mason, John Barrymore played the part which Mr. Gore-Booth has taken, Lee Tracy the part now being handled by Mr. Edwards, Madge Evans played Miss Oldridge's part and Wallace Beery played the part Mr. Morin will play in the Tokyo production.

Mrs. Wren, who has never directed a play through all her connection with the theater, says that she enjoys it as much and even more than acting.

"It's hard work," said Mrs. Wren, "but it's fun to watch everything taking shape and the characters develop and falling into their parts."

HIGA DEFEATED BY ISEGAWA IN 10 ROUNDER

Charles Higa, reputed flyweight champion of Hawaii, tried hard to win his first fight in Japan Tuesday night but he proved a big disappointment and lost the decision to Saburo Isegawa of Kobe in a ten rounder at the Hibiya Public Hall before 4,000 fans.

Isegawa's wild swinging and ever rushing tactics, packed with everything he could resort to, rabbit, kidney and low punches, and hitting while holding with nary a warning from the referee, so completely bewildered the Honolulu boy that he was backpedalling all through the fight.

HIGA SHOWS LITTLE STUFF

Isegawa weighed in at 110 pounds and Higa at 105 pounds. By the time the two boys stepped into the ring for the main event, Isegawa was a much heavier man and a real bantamweight. Thus Higa was at a disadvantage but it must be said that he lacked the boxing skill to offset it. All he had was a left jab that drew blood from Isegawa's nose in the fifth round. He forgot to use his right hand in the first five rounds during which time, Isegawa, in spite of his missing, piled up points to lead by a wide margin.

The Honolulu boy began using his right from the sixth round on but he didn't use it often enough. He concentrated his right on Isegawa's jaw but his punch landed high to glance off his opponent's head. He would have profited more by aiming his right at Isegawa's midsection.

Higa's tactics was to jab with his left hand and to step back on Isegawa's two-fisted swinging rushes. But he made the mistake of stepping back a bit too much and lifting his head to catch Isegawa's punches. A step back and ducking, Higa might have averted the blows.

Higa's best punch was a jolting right hook to the jaw just before the gong in the final round. It hurt the Kobe boy but there was no time for Higa to follow it up.

Isegawa was continuously the aggressor. He never backpedalled a step. He missed again and again but managed to connect with enough blows to the face to be given the decision.

If Higa wants to win his next bout, he will have to carry the fight to his opponent's corner and give everything he has from the opening gong.

YAMADA BEATEN

Promoter Kintaro Usuda, who imported Higa and two other fighters from Hawaii, suffered another jolt the same evening when his protege, Yamada, who has been bowling over all his opponents, kissed the canvas too often that Usuda tossed towel into the ring in the fifth round of a scheduled rounder. The winner was Susumu Tokunaga of Kobe. This was a substitute bout for the scheduled 10-rounder between Yukio Miyabayashi of the Dai Nippon Boxing Club and Iwao Kongo of the Usuda Boxing club due to the former's illness. Tokunaga weighed in at 127 pounds and Yamada at 124 pounds.

Kin-ichi Kanemitsu, 118 pounds, of the Fuji Boxing Club, took a decision from Takeo Hayafusa, 124 pounds, of the Usuda Boxing club in the six-round special event. Tomizo Nakamura 107 pounds, of the Usuda Boxing Club, knocked out Zenkichi Wada, 100 pounds, of the Nippon Boxing Club, in the sixth round of the other six-rounder on the card.

I.O.C. TO SETTLE 1940 GAMES ISSUE ONCE FOR ALL TIME AT BRUSSELS MEET

Domei Tsushin

LONDON, March 19—The whole question of holding the Olympic Games in 1940 is expected to be threshed out at a meeting of the International Olympic Committee scheduled to be held in Brussels in May. Before then the Finnish Olympic Committee will have to decide whether it intends to ask that the games, if held, should be staged in Finland as originally decided.

No official statement has been issued by the Finnish authorities as most members of the Finnish Olympic Organizing Committee are at present occupied with important war posts. The main point of the Finnish viewpoint is whether it would be possible to devote the money and time to the games with so much to do and to spend to repair the damage caused in Finland by the Soviet air raids.

The Finnish Olympic Stadium and other stadia have been practically completed and there would be time before July to get everything in working order. None of the stadia was destroyed by the air attacks. However, the ability of Finland to hold the games is only one question to be decided. A still more important issue at stake is whether it will be possible for Britain, France and Germany at war to participate in the games. Another question concerns the ability of these nations to transport their athletic delegations to the site of the games in the face of the current wartime conditions.

It is believed most likely, therefore, that the International Committee will decide to abandon the 1940 games altogether as it did in 1916 during the last war. Then the Finns might ask for permission to stage either an Olympic Festival, or a Nordic Athletic Conference participated in only by the Scandinavian countries.

AMERICAN SHIPS INTERCEPTED

WASHINGTON, March 18—The belligerents intercepted 128 American ships between the outbreak of the European war on September 1 last year and March 15 this year, the State Department announced here Monday. Britain intercepted 108, France 16, and Germany 4.

DANUBE FLOODING BUDAPEST

BUDAPEST, March 18—The Danube River reached a height of 7.21 meters this noon, the highest it has been in 63 years. The water is already flooding the streets in the suburbs. The flood water is caused by an ice barrier forming in the river, acting as a dam. A flood committee has been formed in Budapest, but the city is at present not endangered.

I.R.A. ACTIVE IN LONDON

AMSTERDAM, March 18—According to reports here from London today, seven bars of gelignite were found this morning in a receptacle for refuse attached to the street lamp in Grosvenor Square. The gelignite failed to explode only because the fuse had become damp.

Police believe that members of the Irish Republican Army deposited the explosives in the refuse box.

Another report from the English capital states the Birmingham police arrested three persons after finding in their house 20 bars of gelignite, other explosives and two revolvers with ammunition. The investigation is still in progress.

Another British Ship Sunk

AMSTERDAM, March 18—The British 5,225-ton steamer "Tiberton," overdue for more than one month, was declared lost Monday. It is assumed that the ship struck a mine and went down with all on board.

LONDON MINISTRY IN MUDDLE

AMSTERDAM, March 18—The muddle in the British Information Ministry continues. The press and censorship department in charge of Sir Walter Monckton which a few weeks after the outbreak of the war was separated from the Information Ministry and made an independent office now rejoins the Ministry with Sir Walter remaining in charge.

Sir John Reith in his endeavors to unite all propaganda and censorship offices in his Information Ministry, according to the Daily Telegraph has already taken over the censorship of mail.

She told them to bear in mind the words of the Valedictory—to be torch bearers of the light—loyal, faithful and undaunted.

Together with the nine graduates, six other girls of the Senshuka received graduation diplomas. The Senshuka is a course in English study for a period of three years and only girls who have graduated from Japanese High Schools are eligible for entry. This year's graduates were Hisako Takayama, Hatsuko Yokota, Kazuko Hamada, Michiko Watanabe, Emiko Furukawa and Hisako Kusunoki.

The ceremonies ended at 4:30 p.m. and were followed by a tea for the parents and graduates. Many former pupils and graduates attended the ceremony. Tea was served in one of the large classrooms.

The new term will open April 6.

New Contingent of Men Called to French Service

Domei Tsushin

PARIS, March 18—The Ministry of War and National Defense today announced that a new contingent of men will be called to the colors on the 15th, 16th and 17th of next month.

It was indicated that a number of men called to service will be dispatched to bolster French defenses in Northern Africa.

14 Killed in Plane Crash

VATICAN MAKES COMMENT

ROME, March 18—An official communique states that the conference between Signor Mussolini and Herr Hitler today was cordial but gives no indication of the subjects of conversation.

The bulletin published in the Vatican City states that His Holiness Pope Pius XII today received the American Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, in private audience in his private library. Mr. Welles was presented to His Holiness by Myron C. Taylor, who was present throughout the meeting.

His Holiness manifested keen interest in the conference between Herr Hitler and Mr. Mussolini, it is reported. Soon after receiving Mr. Welles in private audience, he summoned the German Ambassador to the Holy See to request details as to the significance of the meeting.

Unofficial commentators here all connect the Hitler-Mussolini conference with the visit of Mr. Welles. Since he returned to Rome the American Undersecretary has seen the King of Italy, Signor Mussolini and Signor Ciano. He was originally scheduled to leave tomorrow but his departure and that of the Italian liner in which he is to travel have been postponed.

The American Embassy here today denied a report that he will confer jointly with Herr Hitler and Signor Mussolini somewhere in Italy.

RECONCILIATION SEEN

LONDON, March 18—Reconciliation between the Rumanian Government and members of the Iron Guard organization does not justify the deductions which are being drawn in Germany about the Rumanian Government's foreign policy, it is stated here. The Times today points out that although the Iron Guard was in close touch with the Nazis before its dissolution there is no evidence that the clemency now extended is more than a measure of internal appeasement. It is emphasized that the pardon is only extended to members as individuals.

West Front Action

PARIS, March 18—This morning's communique says there has been a fair amount of activity in the sector of the front between the Vosges and the Saar River. It is reported that in three separate engagements on this front the Germans have suffered considerable losses.

The first was a German raid at dawn which was easily repulsed. Then it was discovered that observation posts in front of the Maginot Line had been occupied in the night by the Germans. These posts are not normally held during the night by the French. In the course of the fighting the French re-occupied these posts and took one prisoner. Later an encounter took place in no-man's-land between a small group of French soldiers and a German detachment of about two hundred men. Machine-gun fire and artillery fire inflicted losses on the Germans, and two French men are missing.

GERMAN SIGNS DESTROYED

BASLE, March 18—French big guns roared into action for a brief period this morning on the southernmost tip of the Maginot Line. Swiss civilians rushed to see what they thought was the beginning of a major battle but they found the guns were being fired at huge German signs: "French soldiers! Do not sacrifice yourselves for Britain!" The signs were quickly shot down.

NO CHINESE LABOR

LONDON, March 18—R. L. Butler, Undersecretary of State for Foreign Affairs, stated in the House of Commons today that there was no truth in reports that Chinese laborers are being recruited in North China to dig trenches on the Western Front.

DUTCH SHIP SUNK

AMSTERDAM, March 18—The Netherlands steamer Sint Annaland (2,248 tons) struck a mine and sank in the North Sea last night. All the crew were saved.

Another Netherlands victim of German anti-neutral patrol was the Nettle (477 tons) which reported on reaching Flushing yesterday that it was machine-gunned without warning by a German plane. No one was hurt.

U.S. Senate Passes Bill To 'Clean Politics'

Domei Tsushin

WASHINGTON, March 18—The Senate today approved, by a vote of 58 to 28, and sent to the House of Representatives the controversial "clean politics" bill, sponsored by Senator Carl A. Hatch, Democrat from New Mexico, which is aimed at the elimination of factors giving undue advantage to any one party election campaigns.

Senator Hatch's measure is designed to prohibit any person holding government contracts from making campaign contributions, to limit campaign contributions from individuals to $5,000 a year, and to prohibit Federally financed state employes from participating in election campaigns.

Political circles opine that the bill may seriously affect the Democratic Party, especially the New Deal elements, in the forthcoming presidential election, since the measure on adoption will eliminate all Works Progress Administration and Civilian Conservation Corps workers, as well as other Federal office-holders from engaging in political campaigns.

Agrarian Expansion Planned by Hsinking

Domei Tsushin

HSINKING, March 16—The Agricultural Affairs Bureau of the Industry Department of Manchoukuo has worked out amendments to the production aims of the agricultural department in the five-year industrial expansion program, and a new large-scale farm production increase program, it was learned today.

With the aim of carrying out these programs, the authorities are now engaged in investigation of reconstruction of rural districts, increase of supply of fertilizer and encouragement and direction of expansion of important agricultural products items.

The Government is expected to submit the draft program to a meeting of provincial governors of Manchoukuo scheduled for March 26, and also to the meeting of provincial vice-governors to follow that, to ask for their cooperation in the realization of the program.

For this purpose the authorities concerned held a meeting at 10 a.m. today to make necessary arrangements to the execution of the expansion program. They discussed a policy for supply of labor and seeds necessary in carrying out the program.

Hsinking Aircraft Firm To Increase Capitalization

Domei Tsushin

HSINKING, March 18—It has been decided that the Manchoukuo Aircraft Manufacturing Company, subsidiary of the Manchoukuo Industry Company, will increase its present capitalization of ¥20,000,000 to ¥100,000,000 in order to embark upon the practical manufacture of airplanes.

The State Council at its meeting today decided upon revision of the law relative to the company, it was learned here today.

It was further learned that the company has already purchased the sites of its plants at Mukden and another place, and is now establishing the plants.

Merger Is Announced Of U.S. Aircraft Concerns

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, March 18—The merger of the Atlas Corporation with the Curtiss-Wright Corporation in order to increase the production of warplanes was announced today by the management of the latter company. The new concern will continue to be called the Curtiss-Wright Corporation.

Welles Again Meets Pope

Domei Tsushin

ROME, March 18—Accompanied by President Roosevelt's special representative to the Vatican, Myron C. Taylor, Mr. Sumner Welles, visiting American Undersecretary of State, was again received in audience by Pope Pius XII this morning. The conference at the Vatican lasted for sixty minutes.

Later, Mr. Welles conferred with Secretary of States Cardinal Luigi Maglione for thirty minutes.

ANNOUNCERS FORM ELOCUTION GROUP TO INSTRUCT IN ART OF SPEAKING

So that Japan will have more silver-tongued newsreel commentators, hotel and department store clerks and others in public speaking capacities, the Japan Announcer's Association has been formed.

It is the association's plan to turn speaking (by many persons) from an irritating noise into a pleasant sounding art.

The energetic announcers were formerly employed at the JOAK station. The enterprise is entirely separate from the Japan Broadcasting Corporation. Its work will be limited more or less in supplying "talkie announcers" or men who do the explaining in news or cultural films.

There are over 150 cultural film production companies in existence now. These companies have been having difficulty in getting people to do a good job of commentating for educational, cultural and news films. They have often had to borrow some of the JOAK men for the job, but have found it extremely inconvenient at times. The appearance of this new association, it is hoped, will eliminate any "tie-ups" and meet public approval.

The business office for the new organization will be located in the Ginza Apartment House on Ginza 1-chome. When a call comes from a news theater, or some cultural film companies or even asking for recording, the announcers will be dispatched. They also will undertake coaching and training new announcers, or giving lessons in the art of speaking to desk clerks in hotels and theaters.

CHAMBERLAIN REITERATES DETERMINATION

He Says Peace Drive Won't Divert Britain from Purpose She Entered War

Domei Tsushin

LONDON, March 19—"Despite the talks of a peace drive thought by some to be taking shape in Europe, Great Britain is not likely to be "diverted from the purpose for which we entered the war," Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain told the House of Commons this afternoon.

Referring to the "fact-finding" tour of European capitals by American Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, the Prime Minister said: "I am confident that he was able to get the actual views and sentiments in all sections of community and see for himself the unity of purpose with which we are all inspired.'

READY FOR HITLER

Referring in another part of his speech to the latest meeting between Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler and Premier Benito Mussolini, he declared: "Some thought the meeting was for the purpose of elaborating a new set of peace proposals. I do not know whether that is true or not. Whatever may be the outcome we are ready to meet it."

The bulk of the Prime Minister's address was devoted to an analysis of the war between Finland and the Soviet Union. He asserted in this respect, "If we have been unable to save Finland, perhaps our power to help the Finns is not yet at an end." Indicating that Finland's recovery will be watched in Britain with the deepest sympathy, he said, "If, as it seems almost certain, further aid is required to help her, this country will gladly take its share with others in contributing toward the regeneration of Finland."

He went on by stating that Germany cannot escape her responsibility since Finland would never have been invaded save for the pact between Germany and the Soviet Union. Also it was only German threats that terrified the Scandinavian countries into withholding the help which might have saved the Finns from collapse. Any suggestion that the Allies failed in their obligations cannot be maintained and, least of all, should such suggestions come from individuals and countries far away from the seat of the hostilities, he said.

Dealing with assistance in materials to Finland, Mr. Chamberlain emphasized Finland's geographical position in relation to Britain, that supplies had to traverse the dangerous North Sea, pass through two other countries along a railway system already overloaded and then go a long distance through Finland by trucks never meant to carry such loads.

GRANTED EVERY REQUEST

"Nevertheless, no appeal was made by the Finnish Government which remained unanswered by us," he said. The first demand was for fighter planes. Then came a request for bombers and for small arms and ammunition in considerable quantities. Still later the Finns asked for larger sized guns. "Every request was considered promptly and was met as far as possible in view of our own needs," Mr. Chamberlain said.

The Prime Minister disclosed that the assistance in materials supplied to the Finns by the British Government included 101 planes, 114 artillery pieces, 185,000 shells, 50,000 aircraft bombs, 60,000 anti-tank mines, 50,000 hand-grenades, 60,000 respirators and 100,000 greatcoats.

Turning then to the question of lending assistance to Finland in man-power he said, "In the middle of January Marshal Mannerheim informed our representative that men were not required as his resources were sufficient until the thaw. Mannerheim said he would be glad to have 30,000 men in May, but stipulated that they must be trained soldiers. The British Cabinet was satisfied that the force required by May would only be available if raised on an official basis as a properly organized expedition. We decided to provide the largest force which would be permitted by physical conditions we had to encounter. Part of the force would be required for assistance of Sweden and part would be an expeditionary force to help Finland. The size of the force on that basis was about 100,000 from Britain and France. We planned that it should begin to reach Scandinavia in March, and the whole expedition would have arrived there before the end of April.

SWEDEN DEMURRED

"We informed the Finns of these plans in the second half of February. The Finns approached Sweden informally but Sweden could not agree to the passage of regular armed forces. At the beginning of March the Finns asked us to allow them to postpone their decision. In the end the date the Finns had fixed for a decision passed without any decision. And, on the next day, we heard that the peace terms had been accepted.

"Even at the last moment we could have sent the British and French expedition and they could have arrived long before the date asked if Norway and Sweden had granted them passage. I say with out hesitation that neither Britain nor France has anything to reproach itself in their common action throughout this affair."

Prime Minister Chamberlain then pointed out that, instead of rendering themselves safer by denying passage to the expedition intended for Finland, Norway and Sweden as a result of that action have brought the danger closer to their doors. "This doctrine of neutrality which paralyzed the action of Norway and Sweden," he went on, "was based on the assumption that anything was better for a small country than to be involved in the war between the Allies and Germany. That in turn was based on another assumption that it was a matter of indifference to those small neutrals whether the war ends in victory for the Allies or for Germany.

Until these assumptions are abandoned, the policy of these small neutrals will neither correspond to the realities which exist today, nor will be adequate to safeguard their own interests. Nothing will or can save them but a determination to defend themselves and to join with the others who are ready to aid them."

SAYS REICH RAID FAILED

Dealing with the Scapa Flow bombing on Saturday, Mr. Chamberlain said if it was a raid on the fleet in Scapa Flow then it must be classed as a failure. Not more than 20 bombs were dropped in the flow and one warship—not a capital ship—suffered minor damage. The only difference between this raid and others which had taken place before was that, on this occasion, for the first time the attack was made on land. It was estimated that 121 high explosive bombs and 500 incendiary bombs were dropped on Land covering a wide area.

In conclusion, the Prime Minister said: "Some would urge a more rigorous policy. We cannot be hustled into adventures which appear to present little chance of success but all the chances of danger, perhaps even of disaster. The time and place for us to strike must be decided with the most expert advice we can command."

Kameda Aids Eagles To Win Over Nagoya

Ted Kameda of the Eagles, who a few days ago pitched a no-hit no-run game against the Lions, had another good day Wednesday at the Nishinomiya stadium near Osaka. His curves, mixed up with a drop, held Nagoya to two hits and helped the Eagles to a 4-0 victory. It was Nagoya's first defeat in five games.

Southpaw Shimizu, former Meiji university star, proved no mystery to the Giants, who bombarded him for 11 hits to down the Nankai squad, 8 to 2.

The Senators won their first game in five starts by nosing out Hankyu, 4 to 2, in ten innings.

ROOSEVELT POLICY WAITS WELLES' REPORT

U.S. President's Future Peace Efforts Will Hinge On Talks, Say Observers

Reports to be brought back by Sumner Welles, United States Undersecretary of State, of his mission in Europe will form an important clue to President Franklin D. Roosevelt's peace efforts in the future, according to opinions of competent diplomatic observers here.

When Mr. Welles first visited the Italian capital at the outset of his current trip to Europe, political observers there entertained pessimistic views as to the future of the American President's peace endeavors. Following his visit to Berlin, however, it is generally said that the situation made a sudden turn in favor of U.S. mediation efforts.

During Mr. Welles' stay in Berlin, the Reich's stand and wishes for a truce are said to have been fully explained to him by German leaders, which, according to views of political observers, will form the very key of President Roosevelt's future mediation moves.

PURPOSE VEILED

Although the true purpose behind German Foreign Minister Colonel Joachim von Ribbentrop's recent visit to Rome has thus far been undisclosed, in view of Mr. Welles' trip to London almost simultaneously with the Reich Foreign Minister's, it is generally thought there will be something behind it in connection with the reported peace efforts by the United States.

Political observers in Europe give much importance, also, to the recent meeting between Adolf Hitler and Italian Premier Benito Mussolini near the Brenner Pass, on the German-Italo frontier. To prove the importance of the conference, the American statesman reportedly postponed his departure from Europe.

During his visit to Rome, Foreign Minister Ribbentrop is understood to have discussed the Soviet-Finnish peace question, and adjustment of the Italo-Soviet relations, besides the reported peace efforts being made by the American President. In connection with the Ribbentrop-Ciano conversations concerning the regulation of the Italo-Soviet relations, they have discussed in detail the Balkan situation.

ACCORD CONDITIONS

It is generally believed as a prerequisite for the adjustment of Italo-Soviet relations, Germany offered to guarantee peace in the Balkans as she did as a condition of the Soviet-Finnish truce for peace in northern Europe. The Reich, it is pointed out, has been trying hard to strengthen her influence in the Balkans and northern Europe.

While much tension in the political situation in the Near East has been reported, Germany, Italy and the Soviet Union are reported to have been making political maneuvers jointly toward Turkey.

Progress in political maneuvers by these three nations toward the Balkans and the Near East as well as peace efforts by Italy and the United States will have much to do in determining the future political situation in Europe, it is said.

ELABORATE ZOO NEARS COMPLETION

Hsinking Gardens Surpass Hagenback, Says Nichi Nichi

The Hsinking Zoo, under construction in Hsinking, Manchoukuo, is considered to surpass the world famous Hagenback Zoo in Germany, according to the Nichi Nichi.

Early completion of the zoo was somewhat hampered due to financial difficulties, but work has been progressing rapidly and the finish is close at hand.

Several factors had to be taken into consideration for the zoo. In the first place, the Manchoukuoan winters are severe temperatures going far below zero (Centrigrade) and there was doubt whether the tropical animals would be able to stand this cold weather.

An African Lion, "King of Beasts" was used to test climatic conditions. He proved worthy of his name by being able to "take it" at 21 degrees below zero (C.).

Pride of the zoo are splendid facilities for the hibernating animals. These include a number of mammals, amphibians such as alligators, frogs, seals, and beavers and several kinds of reptiles. Whether they are under water, in the mud or inside of caves, they will be safely imprisoned inside of glass covered rooms so that the public can see how they act during their hibernating period.

Pro-Russian Shao Seen as China Envoy to Moscow

Domei Tsushin

HONGKONG, March 19—According to reliable sources from Chungking, Yang Chich, Chinese Ambassador to Moscow who returned recently and had been recuperating at his home at T'si Li, Yunnan province, tendered his resignation to the Chungking Government at the beginning of this month.

The reason for the resignation is said to be that he failed to contribute to the betterment of the relations between Moscow and Chungking and that his policies had been bitterly criticized and demand for his return was made by the Communist party.

Ho Yao-tsu, who had been specially dispatched to Moscow last year, was not favorably received by the Soviet Authorities, so it is believed that the Chungking Government will eventually appoint Shao Li-tsu, who belongs to the pro-Soviet faction as new Ambassador to the U.S.S.R. to please the Communist Party.

LORD HALIFAX INFORMS LORDS

Assures Readiness To Face Whatever The Future Holds

Domei Tsushin

LONDON, March 19—In an address before the House of Lords parallelling Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's address in the Commons, Foreign Secretary Lord Halifax today also implied that, whatever the decisions of the Brenner meeting between Chancellor Adolf Hitler and Premier Benito Musolini, Britain intends to fight out the European war to finish.

The Foreign Secretary said he did not think he could define Britain's position more concisely than that at this stage. He could not tell the House precisely what had transpired at the Brenner meeting, but, he said, "we are quite ready to face whatever the future holds—whether good or bad—with a spirit of calm determination."

It would be a bold statement to say that time is not working in favor of the Allies, and it would be bolder counsel still to advise Britain in ignorance of this factor, to take action against Germany without a full appreciation of all that it might involve, he went on. It is not Britain's aim to destroy the Reich or to seek a vindictive peace or anything of that nature. Britain's purpose, the Foreign Secretary said, is to "see that liberty, as far as we may achieve it, is restored to the peoples who have been deprived of it and, above all, to seek security for the world."

The Foreign Secretary said in connection with the air raid on Scapa Flow that, as far as he could ascertain from the information at his disposal, no deliberate attempt had been made by the German planes to launch an attack on civilians. However, he did not disagree with the suggestion that a very legitimate sequel to the Nazi raid would be retaliatory action by the Royal Air Force.

Speaking on the outcome of the Soviet-Finnish war, the Foreign Secretary said, "we should not be deflected from our main objective—to defeat Germany—by the fear that any particular action on our part at any time might damage our relations with the Soviet Union."

have tested and declared potable after being boiled. An efficient electric pump and automatic control and tank system has been installed and the hospital is now ensured of an adequate supply of water at all times.

During the summer a good supply of coal was laid in and the boiler setting was rebuilt. Some inconvenience is being experienced on days when electricity is rationed when the blower system cannot be operated but the hospital is kept comfortably warm by use of gas heaters.

The gate house was announced as having been completely renovated and made into attractive living quarters for the amah.

BELLS IMPROVED

The bell call system was improved by installation of a transformer and new indicator panels. The Ladies Advisory Committee have imported attractive material and hung up new curtains throughout the hospital.

The V.D. department has been completely rearranged and improved together with the down-stairs lavatories and bathroom.

At the last annual meeting F. J. Horman-Fisher was elected director to succeed J. H. Ewing, retiring director, and C. H. Woodward as director to succeed G. A. Morton, retiring director. W. J. Sebald was reelected a director.

At the first regular meeting of the Board of Directors E. L. Matteson was elected chairman, F. J. Horman-Fisher was elected Honorable Treasurer and Mrs. J. MacDonald Smith was elected Honorable Secretary. During the summer Mr. Sebald resigned owing to his leaving Japan and R. R. Saksena agreed to serve as a director in Mr. Sebald's place. In September Mr. Matteson resigned on account of leaving Japan on leave and Van de Stadt resigned as he was being transferred to China. R. McClelland was then chosen to serve as director in Mr. Matteson's and Mr. Van de Stadt's places. J. MacDonald Smith was thereupon elected chairman and R. McClelland Honorable Secretary. Confirmation by the subscribers was requested of these appointments to the board of Messrs. Saksena, and McClelland.

COMMITTEE THANKED

In accordance with the Articles of Federation of the hospital, Mr. Smith, J. M. G. Barbe and Mr. Allebe retire this year. All of these gentlemen have accepted re-election.

In the last Annual Meeting Mrs. L. V. McAdams was elected as a member of the Committee to succeed Mrs. R. S. Mehrtens upon her leaving Japan. The Directors wish to express their gratitude to this Committee consisting of Mrs. H. Dannehl, Mrs. E. W. James and Mrs. McAdams for its cooperation and aid during the year.

Mr. Smith continued that owing to the steps taken by the Medical Superintendent and others, there has been no serious shortage of drugs or chemicals, and the hospital is well supplied to meet future anticipated requirements for a considerable period to come.

X-RAY MODERNIZED

The X-ray machine is being overhauled and modernized to meet the new Municipal requirements which are in accordance with the latest practice. The Board has arranged for the purchase of a cystoscope of the latest type, also a gynecological chair.

The hospital has cooperated closely with the Kobe Ladies' Benevolent Society, and in general with the foreign community. The service of the hospital has been made available to charity cases, and fees arranged commensurate with the patient's ability to pay.

The directors said that it was their wish to express their special appreciation to K. Yuasa of the Yuasa Law Offices who offered the services of his firm to represent the hospital in legal matters.

The directors again expressed their desire to accord their appreciation for cooperation received from the foreign community in general. In particular, they wished to thank F. M. Jenas for his helpful assistance in negotiations with Japanese authorities.

PROFIT, LOSS STATEMENT

The profit and loss account for the year ended December 31 was announced as follows:

To loss on working ¥8,950.60; collection fees ¥373; bad debts written off ¥132; structural alterations and repairs; generally ¥663.50; new artesian well ¥3,210.70 (total ¥4,874.20); nurses traveling ¥2,598.40; depreciation on furniture ¥1,765.12; war memorial upkeep ¥24 . . . grand total ¥18,717.32.

By Donations and Subscriptions: donations ¥678.17; subscriptions ¥10,211.17.

Interest: on account ¥29.30; on fixed deposits ¥2,164.38 (total ¥6,312.47). The loss for year to date figures ¥18,717.32.

In the medical report submitted to the subscribers at the meeting, it was announced that there were 6 maternity cases. Deaths numbered, male 6, female 2. Major operations performed totaled 112, an increase of 20. The highest number of admittances in any month was 26, the lowest 11. There was an increase of 12 patients admitted in the previous year but a decrease of 393 bed days. X-ray films numbered 289 excluding screenings and fluoroscopies. Twenty-two nationalities were accommodated during the year.

STALPHIN HURLS ONE-HIT GAME AGAINST DOLFINS

Pitcher Victor Stalphin, who hails from the Hokkaido, chucked a one-hit game and the Giants had no trouble wallopping the Dolfins 11-3 in Thursday's doubleheader of the professional league at Kobe.

Centerfielder Sasaki's two bagger to left field in the sixth inning was the only hit off the big Russian twirler.

The Giants took on the Lions in the nightcap and emerged a 3-2 winner.

First Baseman Kawakami of the Giants poled a homer in each game. Incidentally, he is leading the league in individual batting honors with a .478 mark, the result of 11 hits out of 23 times at bat in six games.

Nagoya maintained its lead in the standings by nosing out the Nankai squad, 3-2, in the curtain-raiser of the tripleheader at the Nishinomiya stadium, near Osaka.

Hankyu downed the Eagles, 4-2, while the Senators won their second game of the season by beating the Tigers, 3-2.

COLUMBUS' PATH IS RETRACED

Harvard Professor Returns After Sailing Four Months On Discoverer's Route

N.Y. Times

BOSTON—Professor Samuel Eliot Morison of Harvard, who led the Harvard Columbus Expedition over the routes of the voyages made by the great discoverer more than four centuries ago, returned recently to acclaim Columbus as a great seaman and navigator and to defend him against "debunkers" who would have it that he was "a louse and a fake."

Professor Morison, a lean, windburnt man who appears to be more at home on salt water than in the erudite halls of history, returned on the United Fruit liner Veragua with seven others of the original party of twenty seamen and other aides who left here in August in the 147-foot barkentine Capitana.

SAILED FOR FOUR MONTHS

For nearly four months they sailed the route from Cadiz to Madeira, the Canaries, Trinidad and along the shores of Central American countries, seeking in every possible instance to identfy and follow courses and landfalls mentioned in the logs of Columbus and notes left by him and his son.

"We come back with the conviction that Columbus was a very fine seaman," Professor Morison said. "He could get to a place and then come back and find it again when he wished. He was not much on celestial navigation, but good on dead reckoning. Like the Yankee skippers of old, he was good by guess and by God.

"He was very enterprising about narrow places. It is mentioned that in one place the rigging on either side was brushed by the trees. And in the Split Hill Passage from Almirante Bay to Chiriqui Langoon in Panama we found that place. The water is seven feet now and we had to use a launch, but the natives told us it used to be thirteen. Columbus's Capitana drew about ten feet."

Professor Morison said his voyage had convinced him that Columbus was not the boaster that some historians consider him.

Earlier, when the Capitana approached the Azores, Professor Morison said he was on the lookout for items noted by his predecessor over the route. As Columbus reported in his journals, Professor Morison, his wife and others of the expedition saw the Gulf weed turning brown. Then on the last day they saw no weed at all, and Columbus also had mentioned this fact.

The party also visited Gomera, in the Canary Islands, the last place visited by Columbus on his third voyage, and found it little changed. They also inspected the stone castle where Columbus had stayed, which is in use as a church.

ROUTE TO TRINIDAD

From Gomera the Capitana sailed for twenty days to Trinidad, a voyage that took Columbus six days longer because he sailed in July and was at times becalmed.

The expedition followed Columbus on land as well as water. At Lisbon, where the king sent for the explorers at the end of a voyage, the Morison party identified the monastery where the king was staying, as well as a convent where the queen stopped. At Seville they looked up old court records, which included depositions of seamen who had been with Columbus, in an action brought by the State against Columbus's heirs.

He told of making landfalls as Columbus reported them, and also of verifying a disputed claim that the navigator had sighted the three hills of Tobago as he came out of Trinidad. Professor Morison sent a seaman into the rigging and at the point on the course marked by Columbus the seamen sang out "there's them three hills."

It had been worked out mathematically that one could not see Tobago from that point, some thirty or thirty-five miles away, but, as Professor Morison remarked, the decisions of "learned dissenters" were wrong.

Those who returned with him recently were, in addition to Mrs. Morison, Captain John W. McElroy of Boston, navigator and skipper; Dr. Clifton W. Anderson of Rockland, Me., surgeon; Kenneth R. Spear, chief steward, and his son Richard, 17 years old, a seaman, and Malcolm Armstrong and Alan Murray, also seamen.

'Big Six' Baseball Loop Gets Started On Apr. 9

The spring season of the Tokyo Six University Baseball league will open on Tuesday, April 9, at the Meiji Shrine stadium, a week earlier than usual, it was decided by the league authorities Thursday.

Keio, champions of the fall season last year, will meet Tokyo Imperial University in the curtain-raiser. Waseda and Rikkyo will clash in the nightcap.

The league voted to slice the split of receipts to the member teams by ¥10,000 for the year. Ryozo Hiranuma was elected president of the league.

FINN RAILROADS ARE DEFENSE

General Strategy of Nation Based Solely on That of Defense of Homeland

By A MILITARY EXPERT

HELSINKI—Why have the Finns been able to keep the invading hosts of Russia at bay with comparative ease for 10 weeks?

The answer can be given to a considerable extent in terms of railroads.

The general strategy of Finland has been solely that of defense of its homeland. In particular the figuring and laying out of the railroad lines of the country have been planned on the strategy of adequate defense. No thought was given to offensive action beyond its eastern borders, except to interrupt traffic on the Murmansk-Leningrad railroad—for purposes of defense.

The importance of railroads in Finland lies in the fact that in this country of 70,000 lakes, with swamps covering about 30 per cent of its area, and the rest largely covered with forest, no invading army could live off the country—in most sections at least.

Military activities are confined to designated railroads and roads, both of which have been laid with premeditated plans for their tactical usefulness in a defensive war. Invading forces are tied down to these lines of communications. They must be seized and protected throughout their length.

SUPPLIES LIMIT NUMBER

In any locality the number of troops which can be used in an offensive is limited by the amount of supplies that can be furnished them, and as these troops move farther and farther away from their bases, supply becomes increasingly difficult.

The most important of the country's war industries have been wisely placed at a considerable distance from the border. They lie southwest of the railroad running from Sortavala on Lake Ladoga to Vaasa on the Gulf of Bothnia.

Approach to this area might be accomplished from several different directions, namely: (1) from the North—necessitating a hard, arduous campaign; (2) north of Lake Ladoga, starting from the city of Petrozavodsk in Russia, which necessitates a 150-mile detour around the lake with no railroad lines after leaving Petrozavodsk until reaching the Finnish border; (3) across the Karelian Isthmus, which lies between Lake Ladoga and the Gulf of Finland, and which forms the most direct route from Russia, via Leningrad, with Finland; (4) and finally the sea routes.

Any or all of these might be combined in a simultaneous offensive, and so defensive plans had to consider all of them.

PLANNED FOR DEFENSE

If we study the railroad net of Finland we see how skillfully that country has laid these lines to protect its vital area.

The line Sortavala, on Lake Ladoga-Nurmes-Oulu-Kemi, on the Gulf of Bothnia, provides a lateral line for troops resisting an attack from the North, the Northeast, or the East.

A second lateral line, and paralleling the first, runs from Viborg to Ylivieska.

These two systems are connected with transverse lines. All of these railroad lines run through defiles easily defended. The lateral lines permit rapid movement of forces from one threatened point to another, and the transverse lines facilitate bringing up reinforcements and supplies.

The railroad map showing Finland, and that portion of Russia bordering Finland, indicate that the lateral and transverse lines in Finland afford quick concentrations at any threatened area.

In the rapidity with which Finnish troops have been brought up to any threatened point during the past weeks we see the skilled utilization of the interlacing network of railroads by Baron Mannerheim, by which he brought up Finnish reserves at all the places mentioned.

ONLY ONE RAIROAD

The Russians, on the other hand, are limited by the one railroad line from Murmansk on the Arctic Ocean, to Leningrad.

At one point only, from Leningrad across the Karelian Isthmus to Sortavala and Viborg, is there any connection between the two railroad systems.

There is a poor branch line on the Murmansk-Leningrad railroad running from Kem west to Uhtua, but even this line terminates many miles from the Finnish border.

Connecting roads to motor transport are poor and permit of but very slow progress.

We can see the inadequacy of the Russian communication system in this area, limited as it is to the one single line, the Murmansk-Leningrad railroad.

The next lateral line is about 200 miles to the east, running from Archangel to Vologda, with no transverse lines connecting these two except at the southern end, from Vologda to Leningrad.

The Murmansk-Leningrad railroad itself is no well-equipped artery. It is about 845 miles long, and except for the last 165 miles of its northern portion is single track. This northern portion has been electrified, using power developed by the falls of the River Niva, along which three hydroelectric stations have been built.

The railroad crosses many small rivers, skirts lakes, and is an example of railroad construction under extremely difficult circumstances. Except in winter, when ground and lakes are frozen solid for more than six months, the single track often sinks dangerously deep in the boggy ground, frequently disappearing from sight.

In the area north of the Arctic Circle, where the ground thaws only to a depth of two or three feet even in summer, whole sections of track sink or tilt to a dangerous angle.

When such communication lines are vulnerable, when they are cut, when food and ammunition do not arrive, the morale of the troops drops rapidly; they have no heart in the task before them, no faith in their leaders, and no assurance of the supply establishments in their rear.

The impetus for supply must always come from rear to front, and the troops must not be worried about receiving needed supplies of every description.

Nevertheless the Russians have unlimited supplies of troops and the Finns will need all possible outside help to reinforce their own efficient preparations if they are to hold their own indefinitely.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - by Ripley

CHILEAN MEASURE DESIGNED TO CHECK RACIAL GROUPINGS

Christian Science Monitor

SANTIAGO, Chile—A special Council to advise the Foreign Ministry and co-ordination of immigration policy is planned by the Popular Front Government here in a bill sent to Congress. The proposed law has extracted the essence of a colonization scheme by former Lands Minister Medardo Goytia and coupled it with additional rules for general immigration.

The new regime, headed by President Aguirre, desires to "nationalize the foreign element," decentralizing immigrant settlement according to regional requirements and the profession or trade of the new arrival. Congress was told that in this way the establishment of foreign minorities would be prevented.

The greatest attention is given to stricter government control of immigration and sterner sanctions for regulation breakers. The President is to take a hand in drafting new passport visa rules, while the special consultative council in the Foreign Ministry will assist in general reorganization of the Immigration Department.

The rapidity with which these proposals were drawn up and the "urgent consideration" requested of Congress were linked with the disclosures of large-scale bribed Jewish refugee immigration by a special Commission, appointed by President Aguirre under the combined pressure of Congress and the public. A scandal was unearthed which temporarily overshadowed every other national question.

The Commission, composed of Senores Pedro Lira, Bruno Krumenacker and Urbano Marin, reported that 10,000 to 12,000 Jews entered the country, although only 5,167 applications were granted. It indicated that thousands paid bribes to officials and intermediaries in and out of the country and that the bulk of this money, in the opinion of the commissioners, was hidden in foreign banks.

"Complete disordere and lack of control" were found in the Foreign Ministry. There was no hesitation in affirming that "the roots of the evil" are at that source. "Mysterious officials" had exercised "strange influence" and the signature of Minister Abraham Ortega was said to be forged on at least one document. Many application forms were reported changed, one to admit 449 instead of four Jews. The official document was cited: No. 5475, June 16, 1939, communicated secretly to The Hague consular office.

The Commission reported that it was most difficult to obtain evidence from Foreign Office archives, because no reliable files of applications and visas were kept. Jewish immigrants, victims of bribery, were questioned, as well as Foreign Office officials. Although the number of Jewish refugees was placed up to 12,000, the Commission believed that the figure was higher, but customs, immigrant, steamship and police authorities supplied incomplete statistics.

President Aguirre was given the credit of selecting impartial Commissioners and publishing their findings, however much high officials and Popular Front supporters are involved. He has renewed his confidence in Foreign Minister Ortega, but ordered that no more Jewish or Spanish refugees are to be admitted into the country. Meantime he has decreed the institution of criminal proceedings against those cited in the evidence of the Commissioners.

NEW YORK TABLOID TO BE STARTED JUNE 1

R. M. Ingersoll Announces Paper Will Sell for 5 Cents

N.Y. Times

NEW YORK—A new evening newspaper of tabloid size to be sold at 5 cents is tentatively announced for publication June 1 by Ralph McA. Ingersoll, president of Publications Research, Inc. Mr. Ingersoll announced recently that he had completed financing arrangements for the new publication.

It will depart radically from the present-day newspaper and will be styled on the news magazine, with news departmentalized, much of it brief, and with more interpretation and background than is customarily given in the daily newspaper. Politically, it will be independent. In the early stages no advertising will be solicited as such, but it will be handled as news as a service to readers.

Mr. Ingersoll left Time, Inc., last April to develop the new paper. He was vice-president and general manager of Time, Inc., managing editor of Fortune during its first five years and managing editor of The New Yorker from 1925 to 1930. Other executives are Donald F. Stewart, treasurer; William Baumrucker Jr. of The New York Daily News, business manager; George Lyon, formerly of the Scripps-Howard organization, managing editor.

Among stockholders in the company, which is capitalized at $1,500,000, are Chester Bowles, president of the Benton & Bowles advertising agency; Mrs. Marshall Field, Mrs. Louis Gimbel, Mrs. Dorothy Thompson Lewis, George Huntington Hartford, John Hay Whitney, Philip K. Wrigley and Lessing J. Rosenwald.

HOSIERY EXPORTERS DRAFT NEW MEASURES

Plans Designed to Secure Maximum of Foreign Exchange

Special to The Japan Times

KOBE, March 20—A meeting of representatives of the Nippon Hosiery Export Association was held yesterday at the Boeki Kaikan and drafts of proposed regulations governing exports to the Yen bloc countries, and also for exports to Great Britain, were submitted and accepted.

Regulations for exports to the yen bloc countries, aiming at unified control, entirely prohibits the individual export of hosiery goods. Export goods are to be bought up by the Association, and each of the affiliates of the Association will be commissioned with the export of an alloted quantity. The measure was adopted because of the failure of the previously adopted system of self regulation.

Temporary control measures for exports of hosiery goods to Great Britain were drafted with the object of securing the maximum of foreign currency. Eighty per cent of the quantity for export will be alloted to the affiliates according to the irrespective records of exports for 1938. The remaining 20 per cent will be auctioned.

The bonus system, whereby the Association had aimed to encourage exports to the so called third countries and which proved unpopular in Manchoukuo, will not be abolished but carried on with practical revisions eliminating the reasons for objections voiced.

URUGUAY HITS TRADE BANS BY BRITAIN, FRANCE

Parley of 'Neighbors' Urged To End British Insistence On Fixing of Meat Prices

By JOHN W. WHITE

N.Y. Times

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay,—Newspaper and public opinion here is urging the government to call a conference of neighboring republics to work out some means of defense against the pressure and interference of Allied war measures on South American commerce.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs recently issued a communique in which he declared that the Allied blacklists are interfering with the freedom of trade among Uruguayan firms, even in cases having no connection with foreign trade. Several newspapers suggest editorially that this is one of several questions that should be submitted to the committee of neutrals at Rio de Janeiro for solution. The editorials charge that British pressure in the matter of blacklists does not go to the same extremes in other South American Republics as it does here, where the British refuse to sell to or buy from any firms that have dealings with German firms inside Uruguay.

Official and commercial circles are also expressing open resentment against British pressure in the matter of prices for meat supplies for the Allied armies. At the time the British were exerting heavy diplomatic pressure to persuade the Uruguayan Government to intern the crew of the German freighter Tacoma on the charge that she was an auxiliary vessel of the German Navy, the British also opened negotiations for the purchase of 10,000 tons of canned meats. Uruguay eventually interned the Tacoma and her crew, but the meat negotiations have since then been deadlocked because the British insist on the right to fix the purchase price at the pre-war figure.

PRICES UP 50 PER CENT

The newspaper Manana points out editorially recently that while the British are insisting that there shall be no increase in the price of South American products as a result of the war, there has been a blanket increase of 50 per cent in the cost of everything coming from Europe. It also points out that the cost of British tin plate, in which the meats have to be packed, has increased 70 per cent since the outbreak of war, and it asks how it is to be expected that Uruguayan packers can sell canned meats at the same price as formerly. The Manana refers to the movement that was begun after the Ottawa conference of 1933 for an agreement to protect the South American republics against the effects of the Dominion preference policy adopted at Ottawa and suggests that some such agreement will have to be worked out now, since it is impossible for any single republic to oppose British pressure.

In Argentina the British not only refused to pay the ruling prices for chilled meat but insisted on the right to determine which packing companies should prepare it. This controversy is still the subject of negotiations between the Argentine and British Governments.

CHAMBERLAIN VIEW LAUDED

The newspaper Prensa of Buenos Aires recently editorially acclaims Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's statement that world trade must get back on to a multilateral basis but it says that the Dominion preference policy and the establishment of huge wartime industries make it impossible to abandon present bilateral arrangements and economic nationalism for a long time after the hostilities have ceased.

The Argentine National Grain and Elevators Board recently published a statement showing that 109,500 tons of Argentine grain have been lost as a result of the sinking of eighteen ships in the last four months of last year. Included in this figure are 3,400 tons of Uruguayan wheat and flaxseed. The report states that the contrabrand control as now exercised by the Allies is causing serious losses to Argentine grain shippers because of deterioration resulting from the long delays to which the grain-carrying ships are subjected. This, it says, is specially true in the case of corn which absorbs moisture readily. Grain contracts require shippers to guarantee the quality of the cargo until its arrival at the point of destination and fix heavy penalties for any increase in moisture content or damage from sea water or other causes.

NEUTRAL COMMITTEE RECESSES

RIO DE JANEIRO—The Inter-American Neutrality Committee conference recessed recently after deciding to send secret proposals to strengthen the American neutrality zone to the twenty-one American republics.

How to prevent auxiliary vessels in American ports from giving information to warships at sea was reported to be one of the important issues settled.

Recommendations on the status of belligerent submarines and warships in the safety zone will be forwarded to the republics by the Pan American Union.

No more full meetings of the committee are planned until next month. Subcommittees, however, were assigned to consider the question of American exports to Europe and a memorandum from Venezuelan delegates concerning the effect of mines on American shipping.

Informed sources said the recommendations covered merchant ships from American ports furnishing supplies to war vessels, examination of cargoes and intervals at which belligerent ships may refuel in American ports.

National Track Meet Shifted From Koshien To Tokyo in Fall

This year's national track and field championships, originally scheduled for June 1 and 2 at the Koshien stadium, near Osaka, will be held in the fall as part of the 11th Meiji Shrine Games, it was formally announced by the Japan Track and Field Federation Friday night.

The decision to hold the championships at the Koshien stadium in June had been taken by the Federation because of poor facilities and dissatisfaction with the time allotted for the events in connection with the staging of the Shrine Games last year, participated in by more than 10,000 athletes.

The Welfare Ministry, in charge of the Shrine Games, however, had requested the Federation to hold its championships as part of the Shrine Games as last year, in celebration of the 2,600th anniversary of the Empire. It was on the latter basis that the Federation has consented to follow last year's schedule.

Queen Mary Sails From New York

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, March 21—The queen of Britain's mercantile marine, the 81,335-ton Cunard White Star liner Queen Mary, which had been busily preparing during the past few days for departure left this morning for an unknown destination.

Marine circles here believed that the vessel will be sent to Australia to be used as a troop ship. The Queen Mary, which is one of the largest merchant vessels afloat, was caught in New York when war was declared last September.

Ground Breaking Is Held For New Italo-Nippon Center

Domei Tsushin

KYOTO, March 21—Attended by many distinguished Japanese and Italian representatives including Ambassador Giacinto Auriti of Italy, Baron Takaharu Mitsui and Governor Akamatsu of Kyoto prefecture, the ground breaking for the Italo-Japanese Center was conducted this afternoon.

The projected hall is to be built by the Kyoto Italo-Japanese Society and the completion of the building is expected to take place in the next spring.

Italian Ambassador Auriti was honored by the local Italo-Japanese Society at a banquet at the Miyako Hotel this evening for his distinguished services for the promotion of Italo-Japanese friendship.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - by Ripley

From British Sources

the war. He had a special word of appreciation for help given by France and Britain, and said, "We know that the western powers were prepared if the circumstances had been favorable to lend more solid support than others on our front."

FINNS THANK LEAGUE

GENEVA, March 22—Finland's delegate to the League of Nations handed in a note thanking for the help given to Finland and expressed the hope that help would be continued during the period of reconstruction.

Reactionaries Hit

MOSCOW, March 22—The radio here launched a violent attack today against reactionary parties in Sweden, which were accused of aiming at an anti-Russian defense union between Sweden and Norway, with Finland included. Doubt was expressed, however, whether Finland would be drawn into such a combination, or would prefer to obtain favors by living at peace with her neighbor.

TRADE PACT SIGNED

AMSTERDAM, March 22—A wartime trade agreement between Great Britain and the Netherlands was concluded yesterday, it is announced. A joint commission will be set up to deal with trade conditions.

COLONIAL POLICY

LONDON, March 22—The colonial policy of the British Government was the subject of debate in the House of Commons yesterday. A Labor party spokesman preferred particularly to the recommendations of the Royal Commission of the West Indies. He approved the recommendations and welcomed the Government promise to carry them out without delay. He thought it was a pity that the report was not published, and urged that a vigorous policy be adopted to improve education, housing and public health in the West Indies.

The Colonial Secretary, Malcolm MacDonald, reminded the House of Commons that the Government had accepted three or four main recommendations of the Commission, and preparation was now going on for a detailed statement of policy on the other recommendations.

The Government's decision to spend £5,000,000 a year on the colonial empire for ten years, it was also pointed out, did not mean that the expenditure would stop at the end of that time.

WAKABAYASHI AIDS TIGERS TO BEAT HANKYU

Captain Tadashi (Bozo) Wakabayashi worked the corners to perfection and pitched his team, the Osaka Tigers, to a 6-2 triumph over the Hankyu squad in the best game of Sunday's tripleheader of the professional league at the Korakuen stadium here. He checked the Hankyu batsmen to seven scattered hits.

On top of it, Wakabayashi was the hitting star of the game with three doubles. He clinched victory for his team by nicking Pitcher Mori for a double to drive in two runs in the sixth inning.

The Nankai team pulled a surprise by upsetting the Eagles, 5 to 3 in the day's curtain-raiser. Two errors by Shortstop Yamada and a triple by Hideo Shimizu off Ted Kameda's delivery accounted for three Nankai runs in the opening inning.

Nankai counted again in the fourth when Kameda lost his control and walked three men in a row to force in a run. Hits by Uyeda and Yoshikawa scored the other Nankai run in the ninth inning.

Inability to hit in the pinches was the chief cause for the Eagles' defeat.

The Giants went on a hitting spree, registering 16 hits, to swamp the Senators, 10-5 in the other game. Second Baseman Chiba of the Giants and Shortstop Yamagi of the Senators banged out homers.

The summaries follow:

Kanto, Kansai O.B. Ruggers Draw, 9-9

The 11th annual Kanto versus Kansai O.B. (old boys) rugby match ended in a 9-all draw Sunday afternoon at the Meiji Shrine grounds. The score at half-time was 3-all.

With the count 9-all in the second half, Kanto had a chance to win just before the gun when Ijichi intercepted a Kansai pass on his own 30-yard line and started on a long run. A tackle by Nagaoki of the Kansai squad stopped him in the left corner to prevent him from going over.

MANION BARS CONSCRIPTION OF CANADIANS

Conservative Launches His Campaign with Plea for Cooperation with Britain

Christian Science Monitor

BROCKVILLE, Ontario—Canada's Conservative leader, Dr. Robert J. Manion, opening his campaign in the general election, declared recently for "complete cooperation, short of conscription, with Britain" in the war and advocated a national government to conduct Canada's war admnistration.

Asserting the "usual whispering campaign" was under way, he said "in every section of Canada where conscription is unpopular" it was rumored a national government "meant conscription, as Union Government did in 1917."

"I note that even Mr. King in his broadcast recently made an implied reference to the same thing. No one knows better than Mr. King my position against conscription."

A national government, he said, would be composed of outstanding leaders, regardless of politics.

He charged Prime Minister King with "the supreme betrayal" when he refused a British proposal two years ago to establish its own air training schools in Canada.

Dr. Manion reiterated that a national government would be set up with the prime object of carrying out Canada's war effort "efficiently and economically—something which not been done in the past."

It was also being rumored that national government would lead to railway amalgamation.

Dr. Manion denied the suggestion emphatically. His own position and that of his party was the same as it had been, opposition to unification.

"I advocated full cooperation under a nonpolitical board which would have the power to see that cooperation was actually entered into," he said, "and, at the same time, there must be protection of the men whose employment might be interfered with through cooperative measures.

"That, in brief, was and is the policy which I have advocated throughout on railway matters and it is the practicable policy that has been advocated. That is, it could make great savings for both roads and would, at the same time, not be unpopular with the people of Canada generally, so long as it cared justly and fairly for the men whose employment might be affected through cooperative measures."

Kabayama Reaches San Francisco

Domei-Tsushin

SAN FRANCISCO, March 22—Count Aisuke Kabayama arrived here yesterday on the N.Y.K. liner Tatuta Maru and later attended a tea party in his honor at the Japanese Consulate-General. The function was attended also by 150 prominent Japanese residents of San Francisco and members of the Japan-America Society. The count is scheduled to leave for New York, by way of Chicago, on March 23.

YOKOHAMA AND KOBE SPLIT HONORS IN INTERPORT BASKETBALL GAMES

The Kobe Regatta and Athletic Club men's basketball team defeated the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club squad by 55 to 33 Saturday afternoon at Kobe in the annual interport game, immediately after the K.R. and A.C. women players had taken a 34 to 18 beating from the Y.C. and A.C. quintet. Both contests were played in the K.R. and A.C. gymnasium after the hockey matches between these two clubs had been concluded on the Kobe Recreation Grounds.

The Kansai men players took a commanding lead early in their game, and although the Kanto cagers threatened at one stage in the first half, the home team drew away to lead by 27 to 19 at the interval. In the second half, the K.R. and A.C. continued to add to its margin and there was little doubt as to the final outcome from early in this period.

CLOSE CONTEST

The women's contest was closely fought in the first two quarters, the halfway mark finding the Y.C. and A.C. women leading by 11 to 8. The Kobe girls weakened in the last half, their opponents outscoring them by 23 to 10. Shortly after the start of the fourth quarter there was no doubt as to who would win, Yokohama leading by 29 to 12 at one time.

The Kobe quintet drew first blood in the men's game, da Costa sinking a free shot, but Yokohama took the lead, 2 to 1, on a basket by Fachtmann. However, Kawasjee, da Costa, and Austin found the hoop in succession, and the home team was ahead 7 to 2 after five minutes of play. Yokohama called time out but the respite did not stem the Kobe attack. Austin sank another shot, and this was followed with baskets by Isaacsen, Kawasjee and da Costa, to put the K. R. & A. C. ahead by 15 to 2.

It was then that Thompson scored for Yokohama on a nice passing play, and Harris sank a shot from the foul line to make the score 15 to 5. Da Costa's basket, followed by two in succession by Austin, added another six points to Kobe's total. Austin's shooting was deadly, his long shots finding the basket consistently.

Yokohama then staged a rally, started by Harris' free toss, which he made good. Fachtmann scored his second basket soon after, followed by one by Holtom who netted off Thompson's rebound. The latter player also scored the next basket, the score becoming 21 to 12. Yokohama further reduced the margin when Harris sank a one-handed toss from a hard angle. Planas also notched another two points for Yokohama, and the scoreboard now read 21 to 16. The visitors had scored 11 points in succession, and the Kobe squad called time out to stem the rally.

KOBE INCREASES LEAD

Rodriguez then scored for the K. R. & A. C. but Planas replied for the visitors with another basket. Lopez increased Kobe's lead to seven points when he netted for another two points. Thompson sank a free shot for Yokohama, and the score became 25 to 19. Rodriguez dropped one through the cords just before the interval, and Kobe led 27 to 19 as the whistle blew.

When play was resumed the home squad drew away, increasing their lead to 42 to 23 before Yokohama called time out. The minute's rest did not aid the visitors for their opponents continued to pile up points, leading by 51 to 27 with only three minutes of play left. Yokohama then scored four points on two free throws by Holtom and a basket by Planas. Jungers garnered two makers for Kobe, and just before the game ended Bielous scored the final basket for Yokohama.

WOMEN'S GAME

The women's interport clash was packed with excitement in the first half, with play being even. Kobe took the lead for a few minutes, being ahead by 5 to 2, but when the first quarter ended, Yokohama led by 6 to 5, and from this time on were never headed.

The Y.C. & A.C. outscored the home squad by 5 to 3 in the second quarter to increase their lead to three points at the halfway mark.

In the third quarter the visitors' attack began to function with precision, and demoralized the home team's defense. The Yokohama shooting was accurate but the home team could not make many of their shots count. This period ended with the Y.C. & A.C. leading, 19 to 12.

In the final stanza Yokohama added 10 points in succession to their score before Kobe replied. A belated rally saw Kobe sink two baskets in succession, but the visitors' defense tightened to retain their big margin from this stage until the end of the game.

The line-ups and individual scores were as follows:

K.R. & A.C. Men: Da Costa (18), Rodriguez (8), Austen (10), MacDonald (0), Millstein (0) (captain), Lopez (0), Arab (2), Kawasjee (7), Isaacsen (8), Jungers (2), Amram (0).

Y.C. & A.C. Men: Planas (8), Harriss (6) (captain), Holtom (2), Thompson (11), Crane (0), Fachtmann (4), Bielous (2), Shalfieff (0)

Fate of Paris as Fashion

accord. His dream has long been to see a tripartite economic agreement between the United States, Great Britain and France similar to the tripartite exchange agreement. This accord would be gradually extended to take in all countries, large and small.

A more concrete plan is to send an official mission of French couture, accredited by the French Government and the military authorities, to the United States at an early date.

This mission would be headed by Lieutenant Lucien Lelong, who is considered admirably fitted for the task. He is trusted in France and well known and well liked in the United States. He speaks perfect English and is informed about conditions in America. After having presented their credentials to the American Government in Washington and conferred with officials, this mission would visit all important American dress houses with their directors problems pertaining to mutual advantage and to map out the future policy of Paris couture.

Many of the problems that limit the free development of Paris couture are interior and must be worked out by the French alone as quickly as feasible. Among these are hours of activity reduced by the blackout both in business and social life, difficulty of communications (transports) censorship and maintaining freedom of the seas for deliveries.

Commandant Alterman says measures are being taken to ameliorate all these and that they will naturally improve as civilian life in wartime becomes more settled.

Mercury Stages

sit as a small black speck sailing past the sun. Such a transit will be visible on November 11, 1940.

"This planet was a puzzle to ancient star-gazers. They could distinguish it as a planet, rather than a fixed star, because it appeared to rove with gypsy freedom among the constellations of fixed stars. The early astronomers knew five such wanderers, or planets. Today astronomy recognizes nine of them, including the earth. They appear to move rapidly because they are so close. For, like the earth, they revolve in widely spaced concentric circles around the sun. The 'fixed' stars, by contrast, are so distant that their motion, with relation to one another, is not visible to the casual observer; Sirius, for example, is 50 million million miles away. Mercury comes within 56 million miles of the earth.

"Coming between the earth and the sun, Mercury has phases like the moon's, when sunlight illumines only half or a quarter, or none, of the surface visible from the earth. Unlike the majority of the planets, this overheated moon-size world is not known to have any moons of its own. This dizzy little planet has irked astronomers for a century or two by apparently defying the law of gravitation, but Einstein has shown that it obeys his theory of relativity, and thus he saved it from the charge of utter lawlessness."

YOKOHAMA, KOBE SPLIT HOCKEY HONORS

The Yokohama Country and Athletic Club and the Kobe Regatta and Athletic Club divided hockey interport honors for 1940 on Saturday afternoon at the Recreation Grounds, Kobe, the Kanto women's team winning the opening game by 1 to 0 while the Kansai men's eleven were victors in the second encounter by the same score.

Both results were unexpected, the K.R. & A.C. women's squad being considered stronger than their opponents, and the Y.C. & A.C. men being 3 to 1 favorites to retain interport laurels.

Miss Lorna Chapman's goal 12 minutes after the opening whistle gave Yokohama a one goal lead which was never relinquished, while V. T. Arratoon's shot six minutes before the end of the second game gave the Kobe men the single point which decided the issue.

MEN'S GAME

After the opening face-off, Kobe attacked but the Yokohama defense proved too strong. The visiting forwards then obtained possession and pushed deep into their opponents' territory, but the K.R. & A.C. backs cleared. With the defenses of both teams protecting stoutly, the forward lines found difficulty in nearing the goal and a lot of midfield play resulted during the first 10 minutes.

Kobe had the first real chance to score after 11 minutes when Piper's shot missed the upright by a couple of feet. Then Arratoon broke through but Tait cleared before the K. R. & A. C. veteran could let go a drive. Yokohama's front line then attacked and managed to carry the ball into the circle on several occasions but the Kobe defense checked hard to nullify their efforts.

After 20 minutes of play, Kobe had another good chance to score. Evers, the Dutch international, broke through and passed to Arratoon, but the latter's shot missed the net.

On the whole, both goalkeepers had little trouble in the first half, the defenses protecting them adequately.

After the interval the Yokohama team, apparently stung by being held to even terms by their opponents, pressed hard to force play for the major part of the period in Kobe territory.

Mendonca was tested several times in the first 10 minutes after play was resumed, but he proved equal to the situation on each occasion. Harriss had little to do at this stage of the game.

After 15 minutes Russell let fly a high shot which the Kobe custodian blocked with his hand and was knocked forward into play again, but it was cleared. Then Grosfils broked. Crane's drive hit Mendonca's pads, and Beatty's shot on a pass from Fachtmann on the wing missed the upright. Time and again as the Yokohama forwards were breaking through, play was stopped for some infraction of the rules.

Kobe was almost entirely on the defense, and it did not seem as if they would have a chance to score when Evers dribbled past the backs, drew the defense and then passed to Arratoon, who was clear in the circle. As the Yokohama goalie dived out to block the shot the Kobe center hit the ball under Harriss' body into the net.

With only six minutes of play left, the K.R. & A.C. front line fell back to aid the defense. Yokohama attacked desperately to obtain the tying counter, but the home team protected their slim margin by clearing to the sides until the final whistle blew.

WOMEN'S GAME

The women's game started with Yokohama staging an attack immediately after the initial bully, but the Kobe goalie cleared. The Y.C. & A.C. forwards forced the ball back into the circle, but a penalty for sticks resulted in a free hit for the home team, and play was then in midfield. Kobe made several raids deep into Yokohama territory but the Yokohama backs cleared well.

After 12 minutes of rather even play, Mrs. Chevalerie passed across to Miss Stillwell in midfield, and the latter hit the ball ahead. The Kobe defense failed to stop the ball and Miss Chapman who followed up well gained possession in the circle. Her first shot was blocked by the K.R. & A.C. goalie, but the Yokohama player scored on the rebound.

Neither goal was seriously threatened for the remainder of the period, both defenses keeping the forwards at bay.

KOBE PRESSES

The K.R. & A.C. forwards pressed after the interval, but the Yokohama backs did yeoman service. Kobe continued to attack, and looked dangerous at times, but could not penetrate the defense.

Miss Jack made a good run down the wing, and Yokohama was forced to concede a short corner, but this proved fruitless. After a good deal of midfield play, the Y.C. & A.C. forwards obtained two corners, but were of no avail. For some time thereafter the ball seesawed between the 25-yard lines.

Kobe had a very narrow escape toward the end of the game when Miss Baker made a good save of Miss Chapman's drive. The home team then staged a couple of attacks before the game ended, but the Y.C. & A.C. defense held until the final whistle.

The teams were as follows:

Y.C. & A.C. Men: F. R. Harriss; J. L. Swanson, C. W. Tait; G. R. Swanson, M. C. Compton (captain), H. Salter; E. A. Crane, G. E. Beatty, R. E. Grosfils, M. L. Russell, G. R. Fachtmann.

K.R. & A.C. Men: A. M. de Mendonca (captain); H. Auhagen, D. Winter; O. Jungers, A. D. Tarr, V. Behr; W. Lackie, K. Piper, V. T. Arratoon, C. G. T. Evers, C. G. dos Remedios.

Y.C. & A.C. Ladies: Miss Daphne Coolican; Miss L. Andreis, Mrs. C. W. Tait (captain); Miss M. Crane, Miss T. Planas, Mrs. S. Lord; Miss L. Stillwell, Miss L. Chapman, Miss I. Lord, Mrs. G. de la Chevalerie, Miss Doris Coolican.

K. R. & A. C. Ladies: Miss M. Baker; Miss C. da Costa, Miss E. Obata; Miss E. Obata, Miss S. Guterres (captain), Miss J. Crane; Miss O. Heekes, Miss M. Bain, Miss C. Obata, Miss T. Krebs, Miss D. Jack.

Umpires: Mr. G. de la Chevalerie (Yokohama) and Mr. E. B. Kawasjee (Kobe).

After the interport hockey and basketball games a mixed interport dinner was held in the K. R. & A. C. clubhouse in honor of the Y. C. & A. C. teams. About 120 attended the function, at which Mr. A. D. Tarr acted as chairman.

During the dinner, Mr. A. M. de Mendonca was presented with a silver cup by the K. R. & A. C. members for his 14 years service on the club's hockey team and his long term as coach of the women's team.

After the dinner a dance was held in the club's social room.

Yusa Shatters National Record at Buenos Aires

Masanori Yusa, former freestyle sprint champion of Japan, smashed his own national record of 57.2 seconds for the 100 meters, last Saturday at the Rowing Club in Buenos Aires when he negotiated the distance in 56.8 seconds, according to a Domei dispatch.

Tetsuo Hamuro, 1936 Olympic 200-meter breaststroke champion, too was in good form and won the 100-meter breaststroke in the fast time of 1 minute 12 seconds.

NAGOYA BEATS HANKYU, 7-1

Nagoya's batsmen chalked up 13 wholesome hits to down Hankyu 7 to 1 Monday in the professional baseball circuit's tripleheader at the Korakuen stadium here to maintain its top standing with a full game over the Giants.

Pitcher Michio Nishizawa was in excellent form and checked the Hankyu squad to four hits.

Pitcher Yoshio Kikuya of the Lions won his own game by banging out a double to score the winning run in the eleventh inning to nose out the Dolfins, 5-4.

A three-run rally in the last half of the seventh saved the Tigers from tasting defeat at the hands of the Eagles in the day's last game which was called off because of darkness.

The summaries were:

TOKYO SEWAGE PLAN DEBATED

Authorities Act to Clean Up Water Ways, Consider Building Disposal Plant

With object of having cleaner waters in rivers and canals running through Tokyo city, authorities are planning a system to dispose of the 2,000 gallons of garbage which accumulates daily all over the city, says the Yomiuri.

It has been a long standing problem that Tokyo, with all its magnificent buildings and fine highways, has many dirty streams flowing through it to the disgust of visitors. Some people once went so far as to describe Japan's capital as "a gentleman in a swallow-tailed coat but without trousers."

COMMISSION FORMED

To cope with the situation, the Anti-Dirty Water Measures Commission was formed within the Tokyo prefectural government last November with Governor Shuzo Okada as chairman and including representatives of the Agriculture and Forestry Ministry, the Metropolitan Police Board, Tokyo Prefecture and the Tokyo Municipal Office. The commission conferred several times and as a result of last Monday's meeting the general outline of cleaning work was tentatively decided, according to the Yomiuri.

Due to the recent rapid growth of various factories the amount of garbage daily thrown into the sewage system and the sea around Tokyo amounts to roughly 2,000 gallons—enough to feed small fishes and edible seaweeds, the crop of which annually totals several million yen.

SEWAGE PLANT SLATED

Authorities intend to establish special "garbage cleaning days." They also will appropriate ¥8 million to found a large-scale factory to chemically dispose of collected garbage so about 4,000 gallons of dirt may be daily turned into fertilizer, thus both cleaning and productive activities will be effected.

If establishment of this factory proves impossible because of shortage of materials, the plan will be displaced by building a huge garbage storing house covering a lot of about 240,000 square yards at Urayasu town at the mouth of the Yedo river in Chiba prefecture. The house, if erected, will be large enough to hold all garbage from Tokyo city for about three years. These heaps of dirt will also be turned into a kind of fertilizer.

The Yomiuri adds that a plan of deriving pulp from the heaped garbage also is being considered.

Japan's China Policies

in his nation-wide radio address November 3:

"What Japan desires is not to destroy China, but to help her progree; not to conquer China, but to cooperate with her".

To make clearer the content of the new order in East Asia, the Japanese Government issued what was known as the second Konoye statement on December 22; the high points of which are as follows:

"Japan frankly desires China to enter of her own will into complete diplomatic relations with Manchoukuo.... Japan considers it an essential condition that there should be concluded an anti-Comintern agreement between the two countries.

"And, in order to ensure the full accomplishment of her purpose, Japan demands, in view of the actual circumstances prevailing in China, that Japanese troops be stationed, as an anti-Comintern measure, at specified points during the time the said agreement is in force, and also that the Inner Mongolian region be designated as a special anti-Comintern area.

"... Japan demands that China, in accordance with the principle of equality between the two countries, should recognize the freedom of residence and trade on the part of Japanese subjects in the interior of China, with a view to promoting the economic interests of both peoples; and that, in the light of historical and economic relations between the two nations, China should extend to Japan facilities for the development of China's natural resources, especially in the regions of North China and Inner Mongolia.

"... If the true object of Japan in conducing the present vast military campaign be fully understood, it will be plain that what she seeks is neither territory, nor indemnity for the costs of military operations. Japan demands only the minimum guarantee needed for the execution by China of her function as a participant in the establishment of the new order.

"Japan not only respects the sovereignty of China, but she is prepared to give positive consideration to the questions of the abolition of extraterritoriality and of the rendition of concessions and settlements—matters which are necessary for the full independence of China."

The Hiranuma Cabinet which was formed January 1, 1939, succeeding to the Konoye Cabinet, made clear that it would follow the Konoye statement as the basic policy of Japan in disposal of the China Affair.

Premier Baron Kiichiro Hiranuma delivered an address in the Diet January 21, 1939 to the following effect:

"In regard to the China Affair upon which both the Government and the people are concentrating their attention, there exists an immutable policy, on which Imperial sanction was obtained by the previous Cabinet, and in accordance with which the necessary steps have been taken in various directions.

"The present Cabinet being, of course, committed to the same policy, is determined to go forward at all costs for the achievement of the final purpose ..."

WANG STARTS PEACE MOVE

In the meantime, the first and second Konoye statements had motivated Wang Ching-wei to launch the peace movement with Japan.

Leaving Chungking for Hanoi, Wang Ching-wei proposed in his letter dated December 29 to the Chungking Government to conclude peace with Japan.

The peace movement under Wang Ching-wei developed rapidly until the end of August last year when the sixth congress of the orthodox Kuomintang was held at Shanghai in preparation for the convocation of the Central Political Council as a kernel of the new Central Government of China.

The Abe Cabinet, which was formed August 30 in succesion to the Hiranuma Cabinet, clarified its attitude toward the movement for the establishment of the new unified Central Government of China under Wang Ching-wei in its statement September 13, with the following statement:

"In the light of the situation in which a new Central Government of China is expected to be formed shortly, the Japanese Government is determined to support it positively and cooperate with it and furthermore to take proper measures whereby to accomplish the disposal of the China Affair."

After an interval of about half a year since that time, came the historical Yonai statement March 13 this year, which said:

"... Japan will ... render wholehearted assistance toward the formation of the new Government and is prepared to extend recognition following its establishment."

What has happened since that time is well-known to the world—the convocation of the Central Political Council for the preparation of the establishment of the new Central Government of China on March 30.

DOLFINS BEAT NANKAI, 6-0 IN PRO LOOP

Pitcher Kuranosuke Furutani of the Dolfins had a good day, yielding but two hits, to aid his team to a 6-0 triumph over the Nankai squad Tuesday afternoon at the Korakuen stadium.

Hideo Shimizu, former Meiji University star hurler, lacked control to issue eight free passes to first but more responsible for the Nankai defeat was the miserable support given him by his teammates, who committed five costly miscues.

A single through third by Manager Karita started a six run rally in the seventh and the Senators downed the Lions, 6 to 1.

Ted Kameda blew up in the second inning to allow three runs and the Eagles never had a chance against the Hankyu ball tossers from Osaka. One of the runs was a long homer into the right field bleachers by Minoru Yamashita. Hankyu got two more runs in the third to win 5 to 4.

The summaries follow:

Lions	000 000 001	1	6	0
Senators	000 000 60a	6	6	1

MAGNETIC POLE SHIFT REPORTED BY EXPEDITION

Observations Take from Bear, 195 Miles from Nearest of 4 Positions, Byrd Declares

N.Y. Times

WASHINGTON — Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd, head of the Antarctic Expedition, reported recently in a radio message to the Navy Department that his observations indicated that the South Magnetic Pole had shifted its position. The observations did not definitely state the present position of the pole.

The message read:

"Magnetic observations made in Queen Victoria Land indicated that the South Magnetic Pole has shifted. The observations did not definitely establish a new position for the pole, but indicated that it probably had moved in a westerly direction from at least three of the four positions reported since 1909. Admiral Byrd reserved further comment, pending more detailed analysis of his calculations.

"The observations were made while the Bear was moored alongside shelf ice in the vicinity of Drygalski Peninsula last Feb. 7. All the instruments were removed some distance from the ship, of course, to avoid any magnetic interference.

"This station, it was computed later, was only 195 miles from the nearest of the four Magnetic Pole positions previously reported. From that bleak and windswept ice shelf located at Latitude 75 degrees 10 minutes 30 seconds South and Longitude 163 degrees 37 minutes 30 seconds East, the Magnetic Pole, the exact position of which has never been verified, bore 310 degrees true, allowing for a natural curvature.

"Admiral Byrd estimated that it lay only a few miles to eastward of the position charted by Sir Douglas Mawson in 1912. It lay westward, however, of three other positions suggested by terrestrial magnetists, including that reported by Professor David when he visited the area in 1909.

"Interest of the magnetic party centered on the Admiral's delicate dip circle, the needle of which is adjusted to swing up and down, as well as from side to side, thereby indicating the true direction of nearby lines of magnetic force. Because the needle takes a perpendicular position only at the Magnetic Pole, observers at the Drygalski Peninsular station were elated when the needle quivered to a stop only a few degrees from vertical. It was apparent that even where the party stood magnetic lines were descending practically straight into the earth."

Admiral Byrd did not elaborate upon his theory that the South Magnetic Pole was moving in a westerly direction, but recalled that eminent magnetists are in virtual agreement that the pole covers an area of ten or more miles and appears to shift from year to year.

"It is my own theory," he added, "that the movement is to westward. On the only three charts immediately available, the British chart indicated that the pole lay at either Lat. 72 degrees 25 min. S, Long. 155 degrees 10 min. E., or at Lat. 71 degrees 24 min. South, Long. 148 degrees 20 min. E.; the two American charts gave its location as Lat. 72 degrees 30 min. S., Long. 158 degrees E."

EXPEDITION DINES ON TURKEY

Another message said:

"Yesterday, eighteen days after the motor ship North Star left them isolated in Antarctica, thirty-three men, comprising the entire West Base and the snow cruiser personnel of the United States Antarctic Service, sat down to gaily decorated tables in their newly constructed home and enjoyed sumptuous turkey dinner with all the fixings.

"At the head of the table sat the base leader, Dr. Paul A. Siple, under whose splendid direction so much toward the establishment of the base has been accomplished in this short space of time.

"During he period since the departure of the North Star on Jan. 24, a tremendous undertaking has practically been accomplished under the direction of the base carpenter, Raymond D. O'Connor, private, United States Army—the task of erecting the main house has been accomplished under most adverse conditions.

"Through fair weather and biting blizzard, dog drivers, most of whom were inexperienced at the outset, have tramped hard the trail between the cache at the end of the barrier and the base site, hauling hundreds of tons of housing materials, machinery, tools, food, clothing, coal and general equipment, until today but a very small amount remains to be hauled to permanent storage at the base.

"Aiding in this transfer of supplies has been a single small army tractor, the only motorized transportation available at the base. Until the opening of the main building recently expedition members had endured discomforts of living in tents.

"Men, many of whom never before had experienced living in the open, even under ideal conditions, soon adjusted themselves to sleeping in sleeping-bags stretched out on the snow.

Emperor, Empress Grant Audience To Yasuji Okamura

His Majesty the Emperor received in audience in the Palace Tuesday morning Lieutenant-General Yasuji Okamura, who returned to Tokyo from the Central China front the same day.

General Okamura proceeded to the Palace, immediately following his arrival at Tokyo Station in a coach sent by the Imperial Household Ministry.

His Majesty the Emperor received in audience the general in the Omotegozasho at 10:30 a.m., with H.I.H. Prince Kan-in, Chief of the Army General Staff, and War Minister Shunroku Hata in attendance.

His Majesty was pleased to grant gracious words of appreciation of the General's distinguished service on the Hankow and other battlefields in Central China.

General Okamura was received in audience by Her Majesty the Empress who also granted gracious words on the General.

General Okamura was granted a silver flower vase and a sum of money by His Majesty the Emperor before he retired from the Palace.

BRITISH CABINET CHANGES SOON SEEM UNLIKELY

Pickering Thinks Chamberlain Master of Situation And English People Confident

Editor's Note:—The Japan Times frequently affords space for comments on the news and for articles of a national character, which enable our readers to learn typical points of view. The following comment is by a British resident of Tokyo who recently returned from Europe. Other interpretations from the various national groups represented amongst our subscribers will be available as offered.

By ERNEST H. PICKERING

There were those who thought that the collapse of Finland might quickly be followed by some major changes in the British Cabinet, but that does not seem so likely since the debate in the House of Commons the other day when Mr. Chamberlain showed himself complete master of the situation.

From the British point of view, at any rate, the Allies of all the nations concerned (with the exception of the gallant Finns), have least reasons to reproach themselves. They were always ready to give substantial help to Finland, but that aid would have been an embarrassment rather than a help unless Finland's Scandinavian neighbors had shown themselves ready to cooperate. In any case, the losses resulting from Russia's Finnish adventure are far less considerable on the Allies' side than elsewhere, putting aside, of course, the sufferings inflicted on Finland. Russia, for example, has lavished infinitely more than she can afford in men and money in gaining what may well prove to be a most precarious success. Germany has now made patent to all the world the extent of Soviet-Nazi cooperation, and that the continuation of her own struggle involves greater and greater concessions to Communistic Russia.

CHANGES FORESEEN

Small wonder then that the British House of Commons showed itself satisfied with Mr. Chamberlain's leadership. Nevertheless, some changes in British Cabinet personnel are still possible. In such a serious time of crisis no Ministry can expect to endure long unchanged, at least in democratic countries which have this great advantage—they are able to effect Cabinet changes, even a complete change of Government, without anything in the nature of a political upheaval. At the present time, what England and France alike demand is that the war shall be conducted as effectively as possible, and both countries are fortunate in that they can change their Government and ministers for that purpose in whatever direction they think best. Certain it is that any change, whether in England or France, will only be more expressive of the will to win a conclusive peace.

WORLD WAR SHIFTS

In the last war it was not long before the Liberal Government under Mr. Asquith, which was in power at the time, resigned to make way for a Coalition Government, and a little later the Coalition Government had to resign to make way for Lloyd George's Coalition Government. None can deny that every shift in British Government during the more than four years of the World War was an expression of the determination of the British people to carry on the struggle to a decisive finish, no matter what losses and suferings they had to endure.

It may be asked what chance there is now of anything like a Coalition Government being formed in Great Britain. It must be remembered that conditions in Parliament are different now from the beginning of the World War. Mr. Asquith's Administration was a purely Liberal one, and the Conservative Opposition represented a large proportion of the electorate. In such a case, as the demands of the war for sacrifice became greater, it would have been distinctly disadvantageous for the Conservative party, representing a large minority of citizens generally and the majority of British wealth, to have had no say in the conduct of the war.

CONDITIONS NOW DIFFERENT

At the present time, however, the conditions are different. In the first place, there has been what is called a National Government in power since 1931, a Government representative of Conservative, Liberal and Labor. True, the Liberal and Labor elements appear to play a somewhat subordinate part in the National Government, but it must be recognized that, when in 1935, the electors had a chance of showing what they thought of the National Government, the Government was able to secure a most handsome majority. So, to a certain extent, it would not be altogether untrue to say that a coalition government already exists in England.

But, a much more important point is that a necessary preliminary to a coalition government is the desire of opposition parties to coalesce. It is a well-known fact that at the beginning of the war Mr. Chamberlain actually invited the opposition Liberal and Labor leaders to join his Cabinet and they definitely refused. The reason for this, however, is not that they feel out of sympathy with the Government in the present struggle England is waging: on the contrary, the opposition is, if anything, even more strongly fervent about the Government's war aims than the Government itself.

ALL DETERMINED

The fact is, any Government in power in England at the present time would be representative of the British people, since the whole country is quite unanimous regarding the inevitable justice of the war and the determination to fight to the end. The reasons why both Sir Archibald Sinclair and Mr. Greenwood (then acting-leader of the Labor party) refused to enter the Government were, (1) their realization that such a course was utterly unnecessary as a demonstration of national unity, and (2) their belief that they could do much more useful work outside the Government by constructive criticism.

Once again, we have reason to believe, Mr. Chamberlain has extended an invitation to Opposition leaders to join him, and once again they have refused for precisely the same two reasons that guided them before. The unity of determination in Parliament cannot for one moment be doubted. All that Parliament wants is that Mr. Chamberlain shall choose the best available men for his Ministry.

CRITICS SUMMONED

Nothing so strengthened confidence in Mr. Chamberlain at the outbreak of war as his action in immediately introducing two of his sternest critics and most trusted anti-Nazi statesmen in the country into his Cabinet, in the person of Winston Churchill and Anthony Eden. These two statesmen have certainly proved the wisdom of Mr. Chamberlain's choice, for while Mr. Churchill is showing the British Navy to be a most potent fighting force, Mr. Eden is playing his part in drawing the British Dominions into the most effective cooperation possible. There has been only one Ministerial change that has caused any questioning of heart, and that is the dropping of the certainly brilliant Leslie Hore-Belisha from the War Office. That still remains something of a mystery, but one thing, at least, becomes clear, and that is that there was no difference of opinion between Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Belisha on the fundamental issue of the conduct of the war.

PLACE LOOMS

In the expectation that it may not be long before a place is found for Mr. Hore-Belisha's undoubted abilities (probably not quite so early as the rumoured Ministerial changes with which Mr. Chamberlain is to occupy his Easter holiday), there is good reason to believe that England has lost little or nothing by the substitution of Oliver Stanley for Mr. Hore-Belisha at the War Office. Mr. Stanley may not perhaps be so spectacular in his methods as Mr. Hore-Belisha, but of his gifts as an administrator there can be no doubt. In addition to that, now that he has been suddenly thrust into what is one of the vitally important offices, Mr. Stanley is showing as never before his native genius for statesmanship. As a member of the great Derby family, he has behind him a long tradition of public service and I doubt if he has ever rendered a greater piece of public service than by his recent speech at Newcastle in which he outlined Britain's war aims.

I have read Mr. Chamberlain's and Mr. Churchill's speeches on the same subject, but, to me at any rate, Mr. Stanley's simple and restrained words afford the greater inspiration. Having often heard him speak in the House, I know his quietly convincing way, and I am sure it would prove most effective with the hard-headed men of Newcastle.

Two-Game Series Voted By 'Big Six' For Spring, Fall Seasons

Two-game series between the six member teams both in the spring and fall seasons were decided by the Tokyo Six University Baseball league Tuesday night at a meeting of its directors.

It was also decided to reduce the admission of students to five sen. Admission for others, 30 sen for the outfield and 50 sen for the infield bleachers, will also be reduced.

The schedule has yet to be approved by the Education Ministry, which has control of all sports in educational institutions in the country.

1-GAME SERIES VOTED FOR BIG 6 FALL SEASON

The spring season of the Tokyo Six University Baseball league, which opens on April 9, will be a two-game affair between member teams but the fall season will be a one-game affair or five games for each team.

This was the decision made by the Education Ministry Wednesday afternoon after a meeting with the league authorities. The Ministry made it known, however, that a return to the two-game schedule in the fall of 1941 will be considered.

With the view to effecting a reform in the league, admission rates will be cut. Season tickets selling in the past for 66 yen will be reduced to 60 yen, and those for 55 yen to 50 yen. One yen seats will be abolished and outfield seats will be reduced from 30 sen to 20 sen. The principle to admit students free was adopted but to control their attendance, a five sen levy will be made. Through this new schedule, it is estimated that the revenues of the league will be reduced by half from past receipts.

It was also decided to limit the maximum split of gate receipts to each team to ¥15,000 for the year. As to use of the surplus funds, allotments for specific purposes will be voted by the directors.

The indications are that the league will make endeavors to find another field other than the Meiji Shrine stadium, and if it succeeds, it will approach the Education Ministry to have the fall season put on a two-game basis.

The curtain-raiser for the double-headers in the spring season will start at 1 p.m. on Saturday and 12:30 p.m. on Sunday. The nightcap will start 40 minutes after the end of the first game. The schedule follows: (first mentioned is the home team):

April 9—Keio vs. Teidai (Tokyo Imperial); Waseda vs. Rikkyo.

April 10—Rikkyo vs. Waseda; Teidai vs. Keio.

April 13—Hosei vs. Meiji; Rikkyo vs. Keio.

NAGOYA LEADS PRO LEAGUE

Nagoya continued to maintain its one-game lead over the Giants in the professional baseball league Wednesday afternoon at the Korakuen stadium by trouncing the Tigers, 6 to 3.

Scoring two runs off Kinoshita in the second and another in the third, Nagoya chased him off the mound. Captain Wakabayashi took on the pitching burdens himself but before the inning was over, Nagoya had scored two more runs to clinch victory.

Behind the effective pitching of Kusunoki who yielded seven hits, the Giants took the measure of Nankai, 4 to 1.

The Dolfins registered 13 hits to rout the Lions, 8 to 3, in the day's curtain-raiser.

The summaries follow:

U.S.-Argentine Trade

against 260,198,000 pesos (18.3 per cent).

It will be seen that, despite huge British purchases from Argentina, the United States was not far behind—a matter of 10,000,000 pesos—in selling to this country. It must be remembered, however, that much of the remaining sterling exchange is used to pay for British investments, especially the railways. The United States was second to Britain in both buying and selling.

Total 1939 exports for Argentina were 1,570,226,000 pesos as against 1,400,453,000 pesos in 1938, an increase of 12.1 per cent in value, though actual volume was up by 4r per cent. There was a fall in the price of agricultural and pastoral produce during the year. Total imports fell from 1,460,888,000 pesos in 1938 to 1,338,332,000 pesos in 1940, equivalent to 8.4 per cent.

Woman Globe Trotter

for my caddy a lad in blue-print kimono and wooden clogs. I learned to manipulate chopsticks, relish raw fish and shark's fins, and remove my shoes before entering a theater, restaurant, temple or home.

"Several times during my three-years' stay in Japan the earth behaved like a plunging broncho. And, believe me, there's a tremendous satisfaction in going on living after you have imagined your finish was at hand! I have a vivid memory of one tremblor when the chivalrous male diplomats, to a man, shoved the one girl clerk and myself aside, leapt out the windows of the Embassy over a four-foot balustrade, and landed 15 feet below on the sidewalk which was heaving like an ocean in a storm. They leapt to safety—first!"

AN AMUSING EXPERIENCE

In going from Dairen north to Harbin, Miss James found herself the only American on a train crowded with Asiatics and luggage bound for Manchoukuo, Asia's new El Dorado. "In rail travel in the Orient no distinction is made between the sexes, and I found myself occupying a compartment with a Japanese and two Russians—all men. Not even a generous tip would effect a change, for there were no empty compartments.

"Then put me in with some women," I urged. "But there were no single women....only a few Japanese wives in kimono traveling with husbands going to Manchukuo to seek fortunes.

"What did I do? I stayed right there. There was nothing else to do. Later a young Russian poked his head in the door, and chatted with his compatriots—revealing that he had no place to sit or sleep. The Russians then invited him in, making five in the compartment. But the men were extremely polite, and allowed me the use of the compartment alone to undress."

Miss James says that she was impressed with the courtesy and consideration shown her by the average stranger encountered in her travels.

After going up and down and around the world three times, finding or creating jobs in Canada, New Zealand, Hawaii, Japan, Germany, France, and Central America as well as in the deep south and far west, Neill James declares, "There's always a job; and every woman who longs to go out and see the world ought to believe it."

"Wasn't I afraid of being stranded in a foreign country? I should say not," she said. "The only time I have ever been financially embarrassed has been in America. Once my bank folded up, leaving me with $4.16 in a strange Florida town where I had gone, fatuously, to transform myself into a famous author! I didn't become a writer. Food and shelter were suddenly more important. And when I thus found myself without funds, I discovered that I had lost all fear of the 'lack of money' tyrant and had gained a wonderful sense of freedom.

"We only fear the bogies we haven't met," she said. Miss James insists that: "If you have a good digestion and a desire for adventure, the world is an exciting field. If your stomach can stand snails, raw fish, horse meat, whale, shark's fins, seaweed, and lizard, and you've a sense of humor and a curiosity about places, don't wait for your ship to come in! Let the world pay for itself as you go. There's always a job."

IN SWITZERLAND

Then take Switzerland. In Switzerland women still do not possess the parliamentary franchise. Nevertheless, in Bale the wives of men on active service have been offered training as tram drivers, and women motor drivers have been called up for special training in nursing and military science. This too would not have happened without the Women's Movement.

There is Hungary too. Hungary has been busy with the centralization of women's activities along the line of the Norwegian centralization. Twenty thousand women have united under the presidency of Mrs. Keresztes Fisher, wife of the Minister of the Interior, for the purpose of seeing, as Hungarian women have always been famous for seeing, how best to prepare for a possible national emergency.

Some of the women concerned belong to old-established denominational societies. But the greater number represent groups which exclude non-Aryans from membership—such goups as the Patria Association of Women Authors, the Mene Group of Women Physicians, the Turul Student Group and the like. Together they are handling the economic problems of the rural population, the problem of the families of men on active service, the moral and social protection of home life—the whole broad question of how best to prepare defense services in case of an outbreak of hostilities.

FOR THE FIRST TIME

In Hungary, too, women are for the first time included in Home Defense law. Every woman between the ages of 14 and 70 is required to give active help in case of need. If sufficient numbers do not volunteer for home defense work, women may in future be ordered to undertake it. None of this could have come about had it not been that the Women's Movement, penetrating into every country, has caused women to see themselves as something more than homekeepers and has induced them to train accordingly.

It is probable, although I cannot offer first-hand evidence of it, that almost every country in Europe could furnish a story of similar happenings. I do know this—that in Denmark a woman professor of archaeology, Miss Ada Bruhn, has been appointed by the War Ministry to the post of assistant at the Copenhagen Arsenal. That in Sweden Miss Olivia Nordgren has been appointed a member of the Executive Committee of the Government's Food Commission. That in Latvia Miss Zelma Markune has been appointed Inspector of Women and Child Labor at the Ministry of Public Welfare, a Ministry which has until now been handled entirely by men.

In Great Britain women have taken over almost every kind of hard and hazardous work without one question from anybody as to whether they were capable of doing it. This is entirely the result of the Women's Movement. British women, at the heart of that movement in Europe, have learned not to ask but to do. And they are doing superbly!

It has been suggested that the position of women in Europe will not be advanced by the present war as it was by the last; and people who know most about it agree with this view. The point is, of course, that during the years which intervened between 1918 and 1939, women were phenomenally active in their own behalf. They do not expect now the dramatic changes of twenty-odd years ago. But this is all to the good. The quiet work of the Women's Movement has made it possible for women to take their place in the work of their country as easily, or nearly as easily, as can men.

Manhattan Survey Discloses Serious Overcrowding, Lack Of Good Sanitary Facilities

N.Y. Times

NEW YORK—Manhattan rooming houses, estimated to shelter nearly 300,000 persons, "seldom comply with any rules and regulations, nor with any minimum standards of decent housing," Paul D. Cravath, chairman of the Community Service Society's committee on housing, asserted yesterday in making public a preliminary report of the committee's study of the rooming house situation in this borough. Numerous recommendations for the improvement of the lot of the "forgotten people" who live in New York City rooming houses are contained in the report.

"The recently enacted local law requiring the licensing of rooming houses," Mr. Cravath said, "must fail of its purpose unless the Department of Licenses increases its staff by several hundred persons, which it cannot do under its present budget. Otherwise no adequate inspection of premises can be made and, in consequence, there can be no check upon violations."

The report contains the text of the Pack Multiple Dwelling Rooming House Law, enacted by the 1939 State Legislature, and a discussion of its requirements. Mr. Cravath said that enforcement of the Pack Law would cause decent operation of the buildings in which 100,000 residents of Manhattan lived.

The report said that although completely accurate figures were unavailable, conservative estimates indicated there were between 25,000 and 30,000 rooming houses in the city, housing an average of ten persons each.

Confining its detailed investigations to Manhattan, the report said that a study of seventy-five cases revealed that in only seven instances were parlors or living rooms provided in which the tenant could sit and read, receive visitors or meet other tenants.

Although cooking is usually illegal in furnished rooms, primarily because of fire hazzard, thirty-eight of the seventy-five rooms were found to contain illegal hotplates or makeshift kitchenettes.

The report told of 186 persons with only fifty-one double and forty-five single beds, or sufficient sleeping space for 147 persons. In 30 per cent of the cases studied the beds were shabby or unfit for use. Inadequate sanitary facilities were revealed in many rooming houses. The study showed that forty-seven bathtubs were used by 521 persons.

Of fifty-three families studied, thirty-six lived in one room, while seventeen had two or three rooms. The number of persons occupying one-room apartments in this group totaled 104. In one case nine persons lived in one room.

In the cases studied no standard rents were found, the payments in many cases being based on what the traffic would bear rather than on costs. In some sections of Manhattan a clean, small room could be had for $3 to $4 weekly. In Harlem the same amount obtained little but a small, badly furnished, unventilated room.

Medium-sized Manhattan rooms rented for $7 or $8 a week and larger rooms in converted one-family dwellings from $10 to $15 a week.

The report recommended that the Department of Housing and Buildings make a complete census of rooming houses, that a new certificate of occupancy be required for all dwellings converted to rooming house use and inspection made of all premises for which requests for rooming house licenses were made.

SOUTH'S CHARM IS PRIDE OF UNITED STATES

Section of America 'Down Where Dixieland Begins' Said Delight to Visit

By R. H. MARKHAM

Christian Science Monitor

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va.—Come, let us make a leisurely visit through our Southern States.

And we won't stop at the old battlefields or at the many Civil War monuments. We won't follow Northern armies or Southern armies; we won't look up at bronze men on horseback who won renown and glory in conflicts in which American brothers shot one another; we shall not fight the War between the States over again.

Not because that war was unimportant, but because it and reminders of it are not the first things we should study here. Every American from other states should come at least twice into the South. And the first time we should simply be guests; we should rejoice to be among hospitable hosts and try to become acquainted with them. We should revel in the softness of their voices, the gentle fluidity of their language, the kindness of their hearts.

We should delight at the sight of a very beautiful region and feel grateful that it is part of our country. If we came from the West, we'd say, "These Southerners are just like Westerners, only more so." If we came from New England, we'd be astounded at the similarity between Colonial architecture in Massachusetts and in the Carolinas.

In reading the papers we's be pleased to see how much the sentiments of Southern editors resemble those of other American editors. In such a visit we'd come to know the South as a rich, beautiful, charming, loyal part of our country. We'd see that the Mason and Dixon Line is an imaginary border and that all regions in our United States are inseparable parts of the whole.

SOMETHING SETTLED

Then after the first visit, breaking down all prejudices and leveling all traditional walls, we should come again, go with our Southern friends to the old battlefields and stand reverently before their monuments, just to see how dearly our Union was bought, and how extremely precious is the price of the United States of America. We should see that war did settle something, and standing before that settlement of inestimable cost and inestimable worth, we should consecrate ourselves anew to all our Union stands for.

This time, however, our mission is not so solemn. We're just going visiting, going to Dixieland, to see our neighbors.

And how do you suppose we'll know when we enter the South? Where does the South begin?

Well, it doesn't begin all of a sudden. There really isn't any "solid South." It begins as gradually as "Yankeedom." Where do the Yanks begin? At Slav Detroit, Italian New York, or Irish Boston? Most boundaries within America are becoming imaginary. Dixieland and Yankeeland, both seem to begin at Los Angeles.

Still, there is a South and without a geography or history book you can tell when you are entering it. For example, if you hear people referring to themselves as "Ah" instead of "Eye," you may be sure you're going south. If they refer to you as "You all," you may be still surer. If you hear them characterize many things as "puhrty," you may be certain you're in the "sunny South," even though there's snow up to your neck.

FRIENDLY GREETING

If the girl who sells you papers at a newsstand calls you "Honey," and the lady who sells you movie tickets calls you "Dearie," you may be quite sure the South has begun. At first you may be a bit flattered. You may even experience a kind of fluttering of the heart, but that is sheer and absolute self-deception.

These charming vendors will also call your grandpa, grandma, grandchild, your pastor, and the stranger within the gate "Honey," so it's no compliment to you. It's just the manifestation of a kind and gracious spirit.

Hungarians also are very profuse with "Dearie." The Bulgarians call you "Chickie," the Rumanians "Little Flower," and the Serbians "Goldie." Just now I like "Honey" best.

If you find yourself riding with bus drivers as tall and handsome as Andrew Jackson, and as kind as the Apostle John, you wouldn't go far wrong in guessing you're in the South. Still, your guess might be wrong, for most American bus drivers are handsome and polite.

If you're given "grits and butter" for breakfast, the South will have begun. In the West, you would get mush. If the waiter gives you applebutter, you'll know you're in the South.

If you find yourself in an unbelievably elegant and pleasant cafeteria, with such excellent food and distinguishedd service that you rub your eyes and wonder if it's not a Ritz Hotel, you may be assured you're in a Southern city. It's a certain chain cafeteria.

This company also has one in Washington, but there it's so good it's bad. So many Washingtonians like it that they fill it fuller than the "old woman's shoe" and you feel uncomfortable.

In the South there is no such jam and rush. You can easily find a table and eat or visit at leisure in an atmosphere that is agreeable and free from strain.

Such an institution as this shows the excellent working of free competition. The public almost immediately gives its patronage to enterprises furnishing better wares.

Another striking characteristic of the South is cordiality, neighborliness, and sociability. This might surprise you at first thought. You have probably heard of old plantations, feudalism, aristocracy. That would tend to develop snobbishness, class distinction, and exclusiveness.

NO PRETENSE AT ALL

About that aspect of Southern life I can't tell you, but I assure you that as we make our visit we shall find an unusual absence of pretense and an almost complete lack of walls.

A waitress in a restaurant will visit with you as though you were a guest in her sitting room—or do you call it a parlor? The waiter will tell you of his recent trip. If you visit a University and timidly ask a student about the way to the library, he'll soon be conducting you all over the campus.

If it's a girl you ask, she'll invite you to go with her and visit the classes at work. If a man sits by you in a streetcar, he may tell you, "I work for Reuben Schwarz, the butcher. Best man I ever saw. I can't understand why folks talk against the Jews. Of course, I'm a Baptist, but I'm no better than Mr. Schwarz."

In the Southern city of Knoxville, Tenn., a Baptist church recently burned down and a Rabbit in the vicinity immediately phoned to the pastor, offering his synagogue to the Baptists as a temporary place of worship.

Beautiful, commodious, and very numerous places of worship are a fundamental aspect of the South. By the number and size of the churches you could tell where the South begins. Often, the choicest areas in Southern towns are given over entirely to churches. Many of the edifices are magnificent; often they are new.

RELIGIOUS EMPHASIS

Religion occupies a dominant place in affairs here. More frequently than in other areas—except perhaps California—you see along the road such signs as "Jesus saves," or Bible verses. You see signs telling of special sects, such as "Primitive Baptists," "Missionary Baptists," "Free Will Baptists." Often you see big advertisements, urging you to come to Sunday School, or telling you that such and such Bible School has so many members and is the best in the town or county or state or country. It is quite usual for leading men here to teach in such Sunday Schools.

Perhaps the stern, hearty, earnest, religious spirit of the South is connected with rural types of life. In any case, the Southerners are still farmers. They live from the soil. The horse and buggy have not completely disappeared. And mules abound. Maybe that's where the South begins—where mules begin.

In any case, it is a beautiful, rich variegated area, filled with charming, earnest, friendly people, who are very kind to visitors. So, let's enjoy our visit to the South.

Louis Will Fight Paychek of Iowa In N.Y. Tonight

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, March 27—Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis, whose stock fell considerably following the close decision he eked out early last month in his bout with Arturo Godoy, of Chile, will defend his title for the 10th time Friday night, when he will fight Johnny Paychek, of Des Moines, Iowa, in a 15-round encounter at the Madison Square Garden.

Despite Louis' latest showing, betting odds today stood at 8 to 1 in favor of the "Brown Bomber" winning. As previously announced by Promoter Mike Jacobs, part of the proceeds will go into the Finnish Relief Fund.

70 Candidates Named For Track Team

In preparation for the Far Eastern athletic meet to be held in Tokyo in June as part of the celebration of the 2,600th anniversary of the Empire, the Japan Track and Field Federation has selected 70 candidates for the Nippon team to go into training.

Candidates from the Kanto district will have their first workout at the Peers' School athletic field on April 3.

Chinese Women Said

and attended schools there.

"The hope of the Chinese women who have 'awakened' is that they strive for the maintenance of peace and order in a new government, under close Sino-Japanese amity and abandoning of any mistaken resentment against Japan," she said. "They are waiting expectantly for the hands of friendship and love that the Japanese women must extend to them."

STRESSES COOPERATION

Asked about her own impressions of the trip, she answered:

"I really haven't had any time to put my ideas together. But I have been thinking about this talk of cooperation between the two countries. For one thing, the knowledge we get of China, from our education at school is not enough. And there is no way of understanding the new China in the making. The same thing applies to Chinese schools too, because their anti-Japanese attitude must have been formed from misunderstanding received in educational institutions.

"It is my great desire that there will be better institutions erected in Shanghai and Canton, all aiming at the importance of friendship between the two nations. I also feel that it is up to the younger generation to get a broader and more just outlook on China, in order to bring about firm understanding between China and Japan."

Yukiko Kamo Beaten In Manila Net Play

Miss Yukiko Kamo was eliminated in the Philippine All-Comers women's tennis tournament at Manila Thursday in the first round when she was defeated by Miss Sorisa, 6-2 and 8-6. Her sister, Sumiko, Japanese champion, drew a bye in the first round.

Yasu Kimura and Haruo Kodera of Japan entered the Men's quarter-finals by defeating Dango, 6-1, 6-4 and 6-0, and Quezon, 6-3, 7-5 and 6-4, respectively, both of the Philippines.

Pro Games Postponed Because of Strong Wind

All three scheduled games of the professional league Thursday at the Korakuen stadium were postponed because of the strong wind.

The games scheduled for today were:

Eagles vs. Nagoya, 12 p.m.
Dolfins vs. Senators, 2 p.m.
Hankyu vs. Giants, 2 p.m.

sponsibility that she should help develop China's long neglected enterprises such as agriculture, mining, transportation and manufacturing, and turn her continental neighbor into a veritable World's treasure house by placing at her disposal scientific and technical methods which Japan now possesses. It would be no exaggeration for me to say that the disposition of the China Affair demands Japan's best cultural device or moral constructive work together with her enormous sacrifice of blood and wealth.

"The true meaning of cooperation between two friends lies in this kind of reciprocity, and to find the way which makes true cooperation possible between Japan and China is the chief aim of my radio address. I believe I can express it in two words: Mutual Confidence. But to establish mutual confidence among nations is a far more complicated and difficult task than to do it among individuals. Mere reasoning or a use of smooth diplomatic phraselogy would not help much. The peoples of these nations must be brought closer together through personal contacts and the interchange of various interests.

CLOSELY RELATED

"Fortunately China and Japan are so closely related in their make-up as to stand quite apart in this respect. They are mutually approachable and understandable. These characteristics draw them closer for common prosperity.

"It would not take a long time to see that the Japanese settling in China will be converted to farmers and carpenters, who in turn would become the protectors of women and children of China and helpers of her young men in the new life movements.

"It will be impossible for the leaders of New China to realize their grand scheme of the (Anti-comintern and national salvation) unless there exists this kind of mutual confidence between their people and the people of Japan. We believe that new China can become a mighty center which binds together other nations in cultural and spiritual relations only when she firmly stands on the basis of mutual confidence.

"China is vast in her territory, rich in her natural resources, and far more populous than Japan.

"Japan which was like a younger brother to China in the past, has now gone ahead of China through the adoption of the more advanced systems of industry, education, national defense, etc. What Japan seeks at present is cooperation with China in the building up of a new order in the Far East simply by offering to China whatever she has that is more advanced than in China. She does not aim at subjugating, plundering, or occupying China permanently. On the contrary, Japan proposes to play the role of an elder brother, anxious in every way to help bring the younger brother up to the stage where both can work together in harmony and helpfulness for the advancement of world peace.

"American friends, please exercise patience and have sympathetic understanding of th true meaning of the Sino-Japanese cooperation toward the realization of which the entire Japanese nation is concentrating their energy and spirit."

KAMEDA STOPS NAGOYA, 4-1 FOR 2ND TIME

Ted Kameda's brilliant pitching aided the Eagles to stop Nagoya's winning streak by a 4-1 score in Friday's tripleheader of the professional baseball league at the Korakuen stadium.

Kameda yielded three hits, struck out eight and walked six. His fast breaking curves proved most effective in the pinches. It was his second victory over Nagoya.

GIANTS TIE NAGOYA

Thus by this victory of the Eagles, the Giants by trimming Hankyu, 5-0, the same afternoon tied themselves with Nagoya for the lead with seven victories and two defeats each.

The Eagles clinched victory in the third inning by scoring two runs. Okada walked after one out and Iwagaki singled to get on. Nakagawa was out. On the first pitch, Tani fouled. First Baseman Osawa ran after it all the way to the fence on the first base line and could have made the catch but he so feared the fence that he dropped the ball. Gaining life, Tani smashed a triple to left center to bat in two runs. This practically knocked out Pitcher Nishizawa.

Victor Stalphin's pitching was a bit too much for Hankyu and the Giants had no trouble winning. Hankyu could get only four hits off him. The Giants staged a heavy hitting attack in the fifth. Chiba doubled to right and Nakajima and Kawakami both tripled to center to bring in two runs.

Noguchi's three-hit pitching stopped the Dolfins 5 to 0 in the other game. The Senators also hit the ball hard to register 10 hits.

Gannett Says

clared an emergency, power to confiscate factories, cancel or annul contracts, fix prices and wages, and interfere with personal rights and liberties. Mr. Gannett said Senator Borah declared that the bill violated the most fundamental principles of constitutional government and democratic processes and added:

MOST VICIOUS ENEMIES

"The most vicious enemies of human liberty, the most dangerous to free institutions, are the treacherous foes who seek shelter under laws and institutions which assure free speech, free press and personal liberty and then make use of this shelter to destroy the government which protects them."

Saying that Borah had been his friend, had sought to have him run for the Vice Presidential nomination when the Senator was a candidate for the Presidential nomination, and had inspired him to organize public opinion against the proposed "packing" of the United States Supreme Court, Mr. Gannett expressed the hope that the spirit of Borah would be with the Republican party in the coming campaign.

Mr. Gannett declared that he was an adherent of true liberalism and not of false liberalism, "that promises Utopia in return for votes and then sells the voters into slavery to the State."

"Russia and Germany have that brand of 'liberalism,'" he added.

"In the decision of this year, our own and our children's future is at stake," Mr. Gannett asserted. "We can, we must carry on. We can win, we must win, we will win. America's frontiers are not closed. It real greatness is still ahead.

"If we keep out of war abroad, restore peace and prosperity at home and use our experience and understanding to solve the economic and social problems that a changing world has brought upon us, there is no limit to the future of our America. It will surpass all our dreams."

Singing by Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay, the former Anna Case, and Douglas Stanbury, baritone, completed the program. John Edmund Mowitt, who presided, announced that the next speaker on Feb. 17 would be William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, on "The National Labor Relations Act."

U.S. BLIMPS PUT INTO SERVICE TO FEED THOUSANDS OF STARVING JERSEY DUCKS

N.Y. Times

JERSEY CITY, N.J.—United States Navy blimps and a rowboat "fleet" manned by deputy game wardens have been pressed into service in a campaign by the State Fish and Game Commission to save tens of thousands of broadbill ducks threatened with starvation by the freezing of their Winter feeding grounds along the New Jersey coast, Harry M. Armstrong, a member of the commission, revealed here recently.

The blimps, he said, are operating from their Lakehurst base, dropping tons of grain every other day on the ice-locked coves of a sixty-five-mile strip of coast. The sectors covered by the blimps include Barnegat Bay, Great South Bay and Great Bay, Mr. Armstrong said. Although broadbills predominate in the area, large flocks of mallards and black ducks are also being forced to depend upon the State for food.

Before blimps were sent to their aid a horde of broadbills, which are known to science as "greater scaups," deserted the coast, Mr. Armstrong said, and descended upon the Jersey City and Bayonne waterfronts two weeks ago to seek snails, mussels and clams in New York Bay. But, although they found open water, the food was insufficient.

"There is a total of between 35,000 and 50,000 broadbills at the Bayonne Post Terminal and the Cavenpoint marshland of Jersey City," Mr. Armstrong said. "Before we began feeding them they were dying of starvation by the score. And as quickly as they died the seagulls pounced on them. Two deputy game, wardens brought me a dead broadbill last Saturday. It was emaciated, about half its normal weight.

"A similar condition has just been reported on the Passaic River. Now the deputy game wardens are going out in rowboats and feeding them tons of grain provided by the commission."

Mr. Armstrong said the plight of the ducks has not been so serious since the Winter of 1936.

Kodera Eliminated From Manila Tourney

Haruo Kodera of Japan was eliminated from the Philippine all-comers men's tennis championships Friday at Manila when he was defeated by Ladao of the Philippines, 6-0, 4-6, 6-3, 2-6 and 7-5, in the quarter-finals.

Yasu Kimura advanced to the semi-finals by defeating Gabia, 6-4, 6-4 and 8-6.

Miss Sumiko Kamo, Japanese champion, took the measure of Miss Rivera of the Philippines, 6-0, 6-1 in the second round.

WORLD TRADE HIT BY WAR

As Hostilities Continue, Trade Experts Are Kept Busy Revising Reports

WASHINGTON, D.C. — War is playing havoc with international trade. As hostilities continue, trade experts are kept busy revising trade reports.

"Uncle Sam's current export-trade reports reflect rising orders for tanks and airplanes instead of apples and wheat; lumber instead of pork; machinery instead of tobacco," says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C. headquarters of the National Geographical Society.

GREAT BRITAIN SHIFTING ORDERS

"Great Britain is shifting her orders for raw materials and foodstuffs ta regions within the empire wherever possible, concentrating on such surplus items as Australian wool, meat, and dairy products; New Zealand's butter, cheese, and lamb; Canada's copper, lead, lumber, and bacon. Germany, cut off by Allied blockade from the usual flow of overseas supplies, is seeking her necessities from near-by continental sources.

"Neutrals as well as belligerents have inaugurated various national economic policies that have upset former international trade streams. Turkey, for instance, by failing to renew her clearing agreement with Germany, has discontinued a large business amounting roughly to half of the nation's foreign export commerce. Following recent international, financial and commercial arrangements, Turkish exports, such as dried fruits and tobacco, are now postmarked for the Allies.

AMERICAN TOBACCO BOWS TO TURKISH LEAF

"American tobacco is an economic casualty of this new trade movement from Turkey to Great Britain. By eliminating purchases of United States tobacco in order to 'smoke Turkish,' England has at one stroke dried up at its source an annual shipment across the Atlantic of more than 200,000,000 pounds of tobacco. Other commodity upsets resulting from British war economy have occurred in the exports of such American food products as apples, pears, and wheat, now replaced by crops of the empire.

"On the other hand, since the outbreak of European hostilities, increased sales to Great Britain and France of American airplanes, iron and steel products, oil, chemicals, and rubber, have given impetus to new trade currents that offset (in dollars at least) the lost farm-product markets. In December, 1939, total United States exports advanced some 37 per cent over those of the preceding December.

WIDESPREAD DISLOCATIONS

"Manufacturers around the globe are feeling the strain of warborn trade dislocations. Italy's artificial fiber producers, for instance, are facing a problem of diminished cellulose supplies usually imported from Finland and Sweden. Manufacturers of shoes, textiles, and building materials in South Africa are reporting difficulties in obtaining raw materials for their products. England's book lists are threatened by lack of adequate pulpwood shipments from Finland and other Scandinavian countries. Japan's shortage of raw materials has slowed down production of such important exports as canned goods, rubber products, and textiles; while Japanese occupation of parts of China has brought about a noticeable decline in necessary tung oil ingredients used in Uncle Sam's paint and varnish industries.

"Another normal raw-materials source for United States buyers was recently wiped out when England placed orders with Africa's Gold Coast for that colony's entire 1939-40 output of cacao from which chocolate is derived.

"One shift in normal trade routes concerns the diamond industry of South Africa, whose exports are now sent directly to the United States instead of by way of England.

"The disruption and rerouting of commodity lanes has sometimes resulted in specific local gains. Such is expected from the shift of cacao markets, offering new sales opportunities in the United States for Latin America's cacao-producing countries, notably Brazil and Ecuador.

"In British Malaya, India, and the Netherlands Indies, where war has hampered other normal sources of supply, improved markets are now reported for United States specialties, such as machinery, iron and steel, radios and other manufactured goods.

"Following the coordinated-economy agreement, the United Kingdom and France are giving preferred treatment to Allied products and services. Since the war, for example, lace makers of France have been selling 35 per cent more of their products to English buyers French colonies are supplying Britain, under open license denied to other nations, more foodstuffs, and such military materials as leather.

"Canada is buying more cotton textiles from the United States, less from Great Britain, as the mother country concentrates on war-materials production. The United States is taking more newsprint from Canada, as shipments from Europe have decreased.

"For the trade of resources-rich nations, especially in southeast Europe, both the Allies and Germany are making strong bids. Thus various countries with war-economy products (including such scattered world examples as British Malaya, with tin and rubber; Bolivia, with tin, silver, lead, and copper; Rumania with oil and wheat; Yugoslavia with lumber and minerals) are all enjoying something of an economic boom, though hedged about by strict government control and facing an uncertain future.

"With Germany's overseas commerce practically at a standstill, the trade of the Western Hemisphere as a whole has undergone a dramatic change in kind and direction. England has taken over much of the Reich's Latin American business, while in the first three months following the European war declaration, Uncle Sam's sales south of the Rio Grande increased by some 40 per cent."

connaissance flight over northeastern France yesterday crashed in French territory and all the members of the crew were killed, it is reported here today. The German plane's crash is attributed to engine trouble developing when the machine was caught in a severe storm.

On the Western Front activity of patrols in the region between the Saar river and the Vosges mountains has been considerably restricted owing to snow-storms and unfavorable weather. Along the Rhine, however, reports state that the "propaganda war" was continued by both sides.

The first squadron of Polish pursuit planes left the Polish air base in France today for the Western Front. The Prime Minister of Poland, General Sikorski, addressed the men before they left. "You were the last to fight in Poland," he said, "You will be the first to fight for Poland in France."

R.A.F. Shift

LONDON, March 29—Air Chief Marshal Sir E. Ludlow Hewitt, who, as Air Officer commanding the Bomber Command, was responsible for the organization of the successful raid on Sylt, has been appointed Inspector-General of the Royal Air Force in the place of Air Chief Marshal Sir Edward Ellington, who, due to be retired last September, has now left the active list at his own request.

SHIMIZU HITS HARD AS NANKAI UPSETS GIANTS

Poling two homers, two triples and two doubles out of 10 hits, Nankai upset the strong Giants, 13 to 6 in Sunday's tripleheader of the professional league at the Korakuen stadium.

Hideo Shimizu, erstwhile Meiji University star pitcher, playing at first when not pitching, was the batting star of the game with a homer, a triple and a double. His teammate, Centerfielder Yamao, smashed out a homer and a triple.

Shimizu put his team into a 3-2 lead in the last half of the first inning with a long homer into the right field beachers with two away and two men aboard.

Nankai scored four more runs in the second inning. Kusunoki walked the first two men and was sent to the showers, Go replacing him. But he fared even worse. Iwade nicked him for a hit. He walked the next man, and then came two doubles by Okamura and Shimizu to produce four runs.

The Giants got one run in the fourth but Nankai registered five more on the scoreboard in their portion of the same frame. Shimizu and Yamao's triples were responsible factors.

The Tigers won from the Senators, 6-5, and swamped the Lions, 12-3, in the other two games. They bombarded three Lion pitchers for 15 hits.

Scoring two runs in the seventh, the Senators deadlocked the count at 5-all. But Jimmy Horio's triple brought in the Tigers' winning run in the eighth inning.

The summaries follow:

		R	H	E
Lions	000 021 000—	3	6	2
Tigers	700 032 00a—	12	15	1

CULTURAL LECTURES PLANNED AT KYOTO

K.B.S. Sponsors Series At Imperial University

By SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

KYOTO, March 30—A series of three lectures on History, Flower Arrangement, and Buddhism, was announced today by Kokusai Bunka Shinkokai (Society for International Cultural Relations) through its Kyoto Committee of which Dr. Toru Haneda, President of Kyoto Imperial University, is the head. All the lectures of this series, as those of previous series, will be held at the Rakuyu Kaikan Hall of Kyoto Imperial University, Konoe Dori, Yoshida, at 7:30 p.m. on every second Saturday, during the next three months.

The lectures are presented primarily for the benefit of foreign residents, culture students and their friends in Kansai. All the lectures are free and the only requirement is the registration at the office of the Kyoto Permanent Committee, 62 Miyagawacho, Shimogamo, Kyoto. All registrants will receive advance notice before each lecture.

"Outline of Japanese History" by Dr. Naokatsu Nakamura will be the first of the 1940 Spring Series, to be held on Saturday, April 13. Dr. Nakamura is a professor of Japanese History at Kyoto Imperial. In his presentation, Dr. Nakamura will be assisted by Neil Rawlinson, an American research student of the Harvard-Yenching Institute, who is now studying in Kyoto for the purpose of translating a well-known old classic, "Konjaku Monogatari."

"Adaptation of Flower Arrangement for Western Homes" by Prof. Keibi Nishisaka, on May 11, and "Shin Sect Buddhism and its Philosophy" by the Rev. Nishu Utsuki of Honpa Honganji, Kyoto, on June 8, will conclude the series.

Miss Kamo Beaten In Manila Tourney

In a match that ran out to three hours and 20 minutes, Miss Sumiko Kamo, Japanese champion, lost to Miss Sorisa of the Philippines Sunday in the semi-finals of the women's play in the Philippine All-Comers tennis championships at Manila, according to a Domei dispatch. The score was: 5-7, 6-1 and 7-5.

Sunday was an unusually hot day and it proved a great handicap to Miss Kamo.

Miss Sorisa's dropshots and effective lobbying carried her to victory in the end.

Yasu Kimura of Japan was eliminated by Anpon of the Philippines in the semi-finals of the men's play on Saturday, the score being: 6-4, 6-2 and 6-2.

BRAZIL STUDIES DEBT PAYMENT

Improved Trade Enables Her To Resume Service in Some Way on Loans from Abroad

N.Y. Times

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil,—With an assured favorable trade balance of about $55,000,000 for 1939 thanks to greater agricultural returns and with the prospects of even bulkier exports, Brazil now is ready to talk about payment of her foreign debt.

This was the principal item of discussion at the first meeting this week of the National Economy and Financial Council. A short statement by Minister of Finance Arthur de Souza Costa acknowledged that the council discussed the debt, but declared nothing was decided.

"I expect some decision will be reached this month," he added.

Negotiations for resumption of payment on the foreign debt have been proceeding for some time between Brazilian officials and representatives of the foreign bondholders, but a workable formula has not been found, nor has a concrete formula been presented to date by eitheir side.

This correspondent learns that Brazil now has such a formula. According to the information, the plan will pivot around the foreign debt payment plan launched on Feb. 5, 1934, and worked until it was suspended on Nov. 10, 1937. Under this arrangement Brazil's foreign debt was divided into eight groups and liquidation graded, some loans paying 100 per cent, but others less.

New discussions commenced last year and several payment schemes were suggested. One called for liquidation of the Federal debt while State and municipal loans would be left for a future settlement. This suggestion was killed.

It is believed that among several schemes under discussion is one suggesting that all loans be grouped as in the previous plan, but that by reducing payments both of interest and amortization, the debt stretched over a longer period.

Whether some proposal will be made for including milreis as part of the payment is not learned. It is believed some European countries are not adverse to accepting milreis, which would be used to purchase Brazilian materials. It is reported France has been negotiating to accept milreis. In November, 1939, Brazil's dollar debt was $350,577,745.

patches of potatoes (the staple food above 11,000 feet), and barley. The while potato is believed to have originated here and still may be found growing wild on the hillsides.

LLAMAS GRAZE

"Where there is grass, herds of llamas and alpacas graze. Only the Indians seem to know how to handle these temperamental animals which are the chief pack animals of this region. A common unit of weight around Titicaca is 101.43 pounds, which is the normal load of a llama. Sheep and cattle have been introduced and are raised in great numbers for both meat and wool. Mules and burros do the work of horses, which are affected by the altitude.

"Homes of the Indians are small huts of adobe, stone and thatch. Copper-skinned wives and daughters spin and weave; sturdy fabrics are fashioned from llama and sheep wool and cotton; alpacas and their wild cousins, the vicunas, yield wool which is woven into finer materials. The Indians are also skilled dyers and tanners. Although the climate is harsh and resources scanty, some areas around Lake Titicaca support over 100 people per square mile.

BOAT 'TRADE MARK'

The native reed boat, called balsa, is the 'trade mark' of Lake Titicaca. Bunches of the bullrushes (totora) which grow along the shores are gathered and bound in bundles. Then they are tied together to form canoe-shaped boats. Yellow matting sails propel the odd craft over the lake. In summer the boatmen must often hurry to shore when violent thunderstorms suddenly sweep the lake.

"The farther out the traveler sails on Titicaca, the more impressive the scenery. Across broad waters, where ducks, geese, gulls, and other shore birds wing close to the waves, distant snowcapped peaks form a spectacular background gashed by canyon-like valleys.

"Founders of Cuzco and the Inca empire are supposed by some students of South American culture to have migrated from the Island of the Sun, which lies close to the regular ship route in the southern half of the lake. Impressive ruins of well-constructed buildings and paved roads still remain here and on the near-by Island of the Moon."

JAMES ROOSEVELT AND WIFE PLAN DIVORCE; PRESIDENT'S ELDEST SON MARRIED 10 YEARS

N.Y. Times

NEW YORK—James Roosevelt, eldest son of the President, and his wife, the former Betsey Cushing, to whom he was married ten years ago, are planning a divorce action in the California courts, it was learned here recently from mutual friends of the couple. Papers in the divorce suit, it was understood, would be filed in Los Angeles on Saturday.

Mrs. Roosevelt is the daughter of Dr. Harvey Williams Cushing, internationally known brain specialist of Boston, who died last October. The Roosevelts have two children, Sara Delano, 9 years old, and Kate, who is 4.

The grounds for the divorce and any plans for a property settlement or for custody of the children were not learned. If the divorce is granted, Mr. Roosevelt would be the third of the President's five children to be divorced.

At the age of 32, Mr. Roosevelt is one of the most successful young men today, having progressed during the ten years of depression from a student at Harvard into an influential insurance broker, a widely discussed political figure and secretary to his father as President. After a serious illness, however, he turned away from politics and formed a motion picture producing company in Hollywood, which he now heads.

James Roosevelt, or "Jimmy" as he was known to his friends, was still a student at Harvard when he met the daughter of the famous surgeon, then a member of the Harvard faculty. The couple met on a bridal path in Cambridge in 1928, and after seeing each other frequently, were married on June 4, 1930, two days before Mr. Roosevelt's class was graduated. The wedding ceremony was held in St. Paul's Church in Brookline, Mass. After a honeymoon in Europe, the couple made their residence in a cottage in Cambridge given to the couple by the bride's father.

For a short time Mr. Roosevelt attended Boston University Law School, but he had already set out to earn a living in insurance and soon gave up his studies to devote his entire time to business. After his successive association with several companies he organized with John Sargent the firm of Roosevelt & Sargent and wrote several large policies, including a $2,500,000 policy on the life of George Washington Hill, President of the American Tobacco Company.

Mr. Roosevelt was active in his father's campaigns for the Presidency, traveling all over the country in behalf of his father's reelection in 1936.

Indiana Five Wins U.S. Collegiate Title

Domei Tsushin

BLOOMINGTON, Indiana, March 30—A daring, hard driving University of Indiana quintet ran away with the National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball championship here tonight, defeating the Jayhawks of the University of Kansas 60-42.

The Hoosiers were out in front at the start and stayed there till the final gun. They led at the half 32-19.

Following the intermission the Kansans tried gamely and held the winners to a five point margin in the second half. Indiana's early lead, however, pulled them through without any difficulty.

BELGRADE SCENE OF CONFLICTS ALL ITS LIFE

Bloodstained Yugoslav Capital, Conquered Many Times, Debates New Fate

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Few world cities have seen more of warfare than the Yugoslav capital, Belgrade, where representatives of Rumania, Greece, Turkey, and Yugoslavia met (February 2) to discuss means of safeguarding their neutrality.

"So stained with blood has been the life story of Belgrade," says a bulletin from the Washington, D.C., headquarters of the National Geographic Society, "that historians have suggested calling it the 'red' instead of 'white' city as its name implies.

TRADE—AND TROUBLE

"Situated at the junction of the vital Danube and Sava rivers, Belgrade (Beograd) long has held a prominent place astride one of Europe's main highways, both for trade and trouble. As the 'key' to the Balkans,' it has been tossed back and forth between conquerors for more than two thousand years.

"In turn the Illyrians, Celts, and Romans first won, then defended it. Its succession of battered fortresses felt the impact of the attacking forces of Huns, Gohs, Greeks, Turks, Bulgarians, Hungarians, and Austrians: Conquerors of East and West fought there. Christians and Mohammedans battled for it. The Turks had a name for the city—'Home of wars of the faith.'

VIOLENCE REIGNS

"During the World War, Belgrade, capital then of Serbia, received the first bombardment of the conflict, when the Austrians fired across the Danube on July 29, 1914. It was captured by the Central Powers early in the war, then re-taken by the Serbs, only to fall again to the Germans and Austrians in an occupation that lasted until the Armistice. Shells, shrapnel and incendiary bombs poured into Belgrade destroying more than 700 buildings, while most of its population fled, with the Government, to inland refuge.

"Added to the distress in the World War period was an epidemic of typhus—remindful in scope of the Black Plague in this same Danube region which seven centuries earlier wiped out legions of Crusaders.

"With the shifting of Balkan boundaries following the War, Belgrade became the capital of a vastly enlarged territory, the new Yugoslavia, which combined the former areas of Serbia, Montenegro, and a half dozen or more of the neighboring Austro-Hungarian provinces.

POSITION PRECARIOUS

"The city no longer is directly on the frontier, but it is still precariously located for a capital—only 50 miles, in airline distance, from the Rumanian border, 100 miles from Hungary, and a little more than a hundred miles from Bulgaria.

"This central position, which makes Belgrade vulnerable in war, serves on the other hand in peace time to promote the city's importance as a trade and communications center. The hub of a network of roads and railways, it is normally linked by air service with all the capitals of the continent, as well as with London, only a day's flight away.

"In the past 30 years, Belgrade's population has jumped from less than 70,000 to nearly 300,000. Through it today passes a large share of Yugoslavia's foreign trade.

"New and modern buildings have risen in the city to challenge its picturesque but sagging old houses, and wide, well-paved streets now are replacing most of the ancient and congested cobblestone lanes.

"Near fuel supplies, Belgrade in recent years has added considerably to its manufacturing activities, with plants that turn out such assorted products as beer and glue, boots and candy, machinery, textiles, and soap."

STALPHIN AIDS GIANTS TO TOP NAGOYA, 1-0

Brilliant pitching by Victor Stalphin, White Russian who hails from the Hokkaido, enabled the Giants to trounce Nagoya, 1 to 0, in Monday's doubleheader of the professional baseball league at the Korakuen stadium. His speed ball sent ten Nagoya men back to the bench via the strike-out route. He yielded five hits and walked four men.

Matsuo too hurled a good game for Nagoya, allowing only six hits. He met disaster in the last half of the ninth after one out. Nakajima singled to center to get on. With the count 2 and 3 on First Baseman Kawakami, leading hitter in the league, the hit and run play was called and Kawakami came through with a double to left center to bat in Nakajima for the winning run.

Isamu Kinoshita outpitched Ted Kameda to give the Tigers a 3-0 victory over the Eagles in the other game. He yielded five hits.

Kameda went great guns in the first six innings, allowing only two hits by virtue of his sharp breaking drops. But he blew up in the seventh. Hondo started the fireworks after one out with a double to right center. Kaiser Tanaka, Okada and Matsuki all waited for his drops to break and poked hits to right field to bring in two runs. Igauye's sharp hit through the pitcher's plate brought in Matsuki for the third run.

The summaries follow:

Tigers	000 000 300	3	7	0

ain was still planning to dispatch volunteers to assist the Finns.

DENOUNCES FRANCE

A similar denunciation of France followed with quotations of reports in the French press and statements by Premier Edouard Daladier, of France, to illustrate the extent to which France was prepared to help the Finns sustain their war effort.

"Mention should also be made of Sweden," he went on. "From reports in the Swedish press, during the war against the Soviet Union, Sweden supplied Finland with a 'certain quantity of aircraft roughly equal to one-fifth of Sweden's total air force existing at the time.' The Swedish War Minister, stated that the Finns had received from Sweden 84,000 rifles, 575 machine-guns, over 300 artillery pieces, 300,000 grenades and 50,000,000 cartridges. All these materials, as the Minister stated, were of the very latest type.

"Nor was Italy behind in the efforts to fan the war in Finland. For example, Italy dispatched 50 military planes to Finland.

"Finland also received military aid from such devotees of peace as the United States of America.

"According to incomplete information at our disposal, the total quantity of munitions of all description sent to Finland by third countries during the war amounted to no less than 350 airplanes, about 1,500 guns, more than 6,000 machine-guns, about 100,000 rifles, 650,000 hand grenades, 2,500,000,000 shells and 160,000,000 cartridges."

A summary was then made of the casualties in the Finnish war, which, he said, were heavy on both sides.

"According to estimates of our General Staff," he continued, "on our side the number killed and those who died of wounds was 48,745, or somewhat less than 49,000 men, and the number of wounded was 158,863. Attempts are being made on the part of the Finns to minimize their losses. But their casualties were considerably larger than ours. Our General Staff places the number of Finnish killed at not less than 60,000 without counting those who died of wounds, and the number of wounded at not less than 250,000. Thus, considering that the strength of the Finnish army was not less than 600,000 men, one must admit that the Finnish army lost in killed and wounded over one half of its total strength."

Then Mr. Molotov went on to analyze the reasons for foreign war aid to Finland, in spite of the fact that none of the Western Powers were committed by agreement to render such help. He contrasted the situation with the aloofness both Britain and France demonstrated toward Czechoslovakia during the Nazi invasion.

HIRED PEN PIRATES

"Hired pen pirates, scribes who specialize in fraudulent news and hoaxes, are trying to attribute this conduct of Britain and France to their particular solicitude for the 'small nations,'" he proceeded. "But to attribute this policy of England and France to their solicitude for the interests of small countries would be rediculous. To attribute it to their obligations toward the League of Nations which, it is alleged, demanded protection for one of its members, is also absurd.

In fact it was hardly a year ago that Italy seized and destroyed independent Albania, which was a member of the League of Nations. . . . Did England and France at the time come to the Albanians' defense? Did they even raise a feeble voice in protest against Italy's predatory action in forcibly subjugating Albania without the least regard for its population? . . . Neither England nor France, nor the United States, nor the League of Nations, which is dominated by these Imperialists, even raised a finger of protest in this case."

The foreign assistance to Finland "is to be explained by the fact that in Finland they had a place d'armes ready for an attack upon the U.S.S.R. whereas Albania did not occupy such a place in their plans."

"In the utterances of the Anglo-French imperialist press and of its Socialist henchmen, we hear the voice of infuriated Imperialism which hates the Socialist State and with which we have been familiar from the earliest days of the Soviet Union, he said. "As far back as on April 17, 1919, the Times of London wrote that, 'If we look at the map, we shall find that the best approach to Petrograd is from the Baltic and that the shortest and easiest route is through Finland, whose frontiers are only about 30 miles distant from the Russian capital. Finland is the key to Petrograd and Petrograd is the key to Moscow.'

"If proofs were needed that Britain and France had not yet discarded these harebrained plans, the recent events in Finland have dispelled all doubts on this score.* * * These plans have again been thwarted * * * because at the last moment the leading circles in Finland, and also in Sweden and Norway, showed at last some glimmerings of reason."

After describing the new peace treaty with Finland, he said it would be a downright falsehood to term the treaty's provisions as destructive of Finland's independence. "For example, he argued, the new Finland contains nearly four times the territory of Hungary and more than eight times the territory of Switzerland.

Mr. Molotov closed this section of his address with an expression of satisfaction over the peace treaty and a warning against possible violation of its provisions in the future by "certain circles in Finland" and others harboring animosity toward the Soviet Union. Then he turned to the Balkan situation.

ABSENCE OF PACT

The absence of a non-aggression pact between the Soviet Union and Rumania, he said, was due to the fact that a number of unsettled questions are pending between the two States, notably that concerning Bessarabia, whose seizure by Rumania has never received Soviet recognition. "Hence," he went on, "there are no grounds for any deterioration of Soviet-Rumanian relations.

"True, it is now some time since we have had a Minister in Rumania and his duties are being performed by a charge d'Affaires. But this had been due to special circumstances in the recent past. If we are to deal with this question, we must recall the dubious role played by the Rumanian authorities in 1938 in relation to Mr. Butenko, who was then our Minister in Rumania. In a mysterious way he disappeared not only from the Legation, but from Rumania. And to this day the Soviet Government has been unable to obtain any authentic information concerning his disappearance.

"What is more, we are expected to believe that the Rumanian authorities had nothing to do with this scandalous and criminal affair. Needless to say, things like this should not be allowed to happen in a civilized State, or in any well-ordered country for that matter. After this, the reason for the delay in the appointment of a new Soviet Minister to the Rumanian capital should be quite clear. At the same time, the Rumanian authorities will understand that affairs of this nature are not to be tolerated."

After this mention was made of the Soviet Union's relations with Japan and the United States. Mr. Molotov said:

"In our relations with Japan, we have, not without some difficulty, settled several questions. This is evidenced by the conclusion on December 31 last of the Soviet-Japanese fisheries convention for the current year and also by Japan's consent to pay the last installment for the transfer of the former Chinese Eastern Railway, which had been long overdue.

"Nevertheless, we cannot express great satisfaction over our relations with Japan. To this day, for example,—notwithstanding prolonged negotiations between the Soviet-Mongolian and Japanese-Manchurian delegates—the important question of determining a frontier line on the territory in the area of military conflict last year remains unsettled. This is because the Japanese authorities continue to submit extremely impracticable proposals.

MEMBER OF DIET

"The other day a member of the Japanese Diet suggested a settlement of this question, for example, by purchasing the maritime region and other territories. The Japanese Diet member who put this question and is interested in the purchase of Soviet territory which is not for sale must be a jovial fellow. But in my opinion, his stupid questions will not help to raise the prestige of his Parliament.

"If, however, Japan's Parliament is so keen on trading why shouldn't its members raise the question of selling the southern portion of Saghalien? I have no doubt that, in that case, ready purchasers would be found in the U.S.S.R."

"As regards our relations with the United States," Mr. Molotov declared in conclusion, "they have not grown any better lately; nor, for that matter, they have not grown any worse if we do not count the so-called moral embargo against the U.S.S.R. which is perfectly meaningless especially after the conclusion of peace between the U.S.S.R. and Finland.

"Our imports from the U. S. A. have increased as compared with last year and they might increase further if the American authorities refrain from placing obstacles in their way.

"Such, on the whole, is the international situation taken in the light of events which have taken place in the last five months. From all that I have said, the main tasks of our foreign policy in the present international situation will be clear:

"Stated briefly, the task of our foreign policy is to ensure peace among nations and security of our own country. The conclusion that must be drawn from this is that we must maintain our position of neutrality and refrain from participating in the war between the large European Powers. This position is based on the treaties we have concluded and it fully corresponds to the interests of the Soviet Union."

Unemployment Declines in Bohemia and Moravia

Transocean

PRAGUE, March 28—Unemployment has declined in the Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia from 93,000 workers last year to 18,000 at the present time, it was stated today. During the same period the number of employed persons increased from 348,000 to 2,000,000.

This exceptional increase in the number of persons gainfully employed was explained by pointing out that the 93,000 unemployed did not include a large number of persons not actively seeking work. These persons were estimated to be 30 per cent of the number of persons capable of working at the time the Protectorate was established.

RICE SHATTERS WORLD MARK FOR 3-MILE

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, April 1—Gregory Rice, of Notre Dame, last night shattered the world's record for the three-mile event when he outsped Donald Lash, of the Indiana State Police, and Taisto Maki, Finnish holder of the 5,000 meter world's mark, in a meet at the Madison Square Garden for raising funds for Finnish relief. Five other world records toppled in the meet.

The Notre Dame runner set a new world's indoor mark for the three-mile, when he negotiated the distance in 13 minutes, 52.3 seconds. Lash finished second in 13 minutes 55 seconds, Maki, third, in 13 minutes 56.8 seconds.

Chuck Fenske, of Wisconsin University, won the half-mile in six minutes 39.4 seconds, setting a new record for the course.

Alan Tolmich, formerly of Wayne University, sped over the 50 yard low hurdles in six seconds flat to set a new world's record for the distance. He then flashed over the 75-yard high hurdles in 8.4, bettering the recognized mark.

George Blozis, of Georgia Tech, cracked world records for the eight, 12 and 16 pound shotput, when he threw the eight pound pellet 78 feet ⅛ inches, the 12-pounder, 65 feet and the 16-lb shot 55 feet 1 inch.

Meanwhile, John Borican, of Elberon, won the three quarter mile in 3 minutes eight and six-tenth seconds.

Charles Belcher, of Georgia Tech, captured the 500-yard event in 58.1 seconds.

The sixty-yard high hurdles was taken by Fuller, of Virginia University. He was clocked at 7.5 seconds.

SUMMERFORD MEETS AMINO TUESDAY NIGHT

Boxing fans are in for a rare treat next Tuesday night at the Korakuen when Kintaro Usuda puts on one of the finest fight cards in months.

Jerry Summerford, colored welterweight, and Kid Felipe, Filipino featherweight, invited from Honolulu along with Charles Higa, flyweight Nisei scrapper, by Usuda, will make their debut in two of the triple ten-round main eventers.

Summerford, near six feet in height, meets Matsuo (Tiger) Amino in the last bout of the evening. Fights between the big boys are rare in this country and this bout alone is likely to bring a record crowd. It should be a humdinger with Amino always a crowd pleaser meeting the colored boy who is out to impress the Japanese fighting world. Amino is plenty tough and courageous and he will be in the ring fighting like a tiger. He is a veteran and Summerford will have to be in condition and have ability to beat him.

Of the three fighters from Honolulu, Kid Felipe has the best record. In his 85 bouts to date, he has been beaten only five times. He is a hard hitter and he has come to Japan with the intention of knocking out Tsuneo (Piston) Horiguchi, Japan's premier boxer. He meets Susumu Tokunaga of the Dai Nippon Boxing Club. The latter is no easy man to beat. As a matter of fact, he is one of the most promising featherweights in the country today. He held Umio Gen, the well-known Korean scrapper, to a draw recently and a few days ago, he knocked out Yamada, protege of Usuda.

Higa, who lost a decision to Saburo Isegawa of the Kansai on March 19 in his first fight, will meet Shoichi Otsu, former bantamweight champion of Japan, in the eight-round special bout of the evening. He has regained condition and he is confident of redeeming himself. Otsu, on the other hand, is one of those scrappers who keeps swinging with both hands from the opening to the closing gongs of every round, and he will be in there after a knockout.

Iwao Kongo, leading flyweight of the country today and Usuda's best boy, will meet Ikuo Miyabashi of the Dai Nippon Boxing Club, in a 10-rounder. The two boys were scheduled to meet on March 19 but illness kept Miyabashi home. It will be a rip-snorting battle.

There will be a six rounder and three four-round preliminaries to complete the card.

BOLIVIAN DELEGATION TO LEAVE TODAY

Party of Seven Completes Four-Month Visit in Orient

Since their arrival on December 4, the party of six Bolivian officers and a representative of the Bolivian Ministry of Commerce have been on inspection tours through Japan, Manchoukuo and China. According to Domei, they are leaving for home on the Argentina Maru sailing from Yokohama today.

Led by Lieutenant-Colonel Roberto Olmos as head of the party the other members are Lieutenant-Colonel Victor Carlos Criales, Major Santiago B. Poe, Captain Ferdinand Murales Siles, Captain Eliodoro Murrillo, Captain Jose Alfonso Delgadillo and Carlos Arce Ardiles, official of the Commerce Ministry.

After an extensive tour of the three Asian countries, viewing the industrial and cultural institutions there, the party returned to the capital and is making preparations for its departure.

Prior to its departure, the party was invited to see a souvenior moving picture entitled "Nippon," a three-reel record of their visit to this country and "Elementary Schools in Japan," which will be presented to them by Director Matsuzo Nagai of the Society for International Cultural Relations.

The film "Nippon" was produced under the joint efforts of the Board of Tourist Industry and the Youth's Cultural Society. The two pictures were shown through an invitation issued by the Showa Trading Company, in the auditorium of the firm. They are to be presented to the party as souvenirs of its visit to the Orient.

CHUNGKING INSTRUCTS BLUE SHIRTS TO STOP NANKING-BOUND DESERTERS

Domei Tsushin

NANKING, April 1—Greatly disturbed at the birth of the new National Government and the announcement of the return of China's capital to Nanking, the Chungking Government issued strict instructions to Tai Li, head of the Blue Shirts Society, to keep strict watch over possible deserters from Hupeh, Hunan, Kwangtung and Kwangsi provinces and to mete severe punishment to all deserters, according to reliable information reaching here from Chungking.

The information further says that the Chungking Government also issued a decree that all Government officials absent from duty for three days would be severely punished.

All the military commanders throughout China were ordered by the Chungking Government, it is said, to stage an anti-peace movement beginning April 1.

Tai Li, head of the Blue Shirts Society, was reportedly instructed to put special service men in Ichang, Shasi, and Siangyang in Hupeh province, Changsha, Chuchow, Hengyang, Changteh and Paoking in Hunan, in Shaokwan, Wuchow, Kuellin and Liuchow in Kwangsi province and to rigidly inspect all people, to arrest and mete severe punishment to those trying to desert from these places. The Executive Yuan also is alleged to have issued a decree that all Government officials leaving their duties for three days should be severely punished.

The Military Council is also said to have been instructed to keep a close watch and detain all officials and officers trying to secretly leave their duties.

Chiang Kai-shek, it is understood, is making announcements almost daily, and Lin Sen, Sun Fo and H. H. Kung are also reportedly broadcasting derisions against the new National Government at Nanking.

In spite of all these efforts to prevent people from deserting Chungking and other places, it is reported that already 43 persons have been arrested by the Chungking Government from March 21 to 24.

DOLFINS TOP NAGOYA, 4-2; GIANTS LEAD

Inability to hit the hooks of Pitcher Nakayama of the Dolfins sent Nagoya, rivals from the same city, to a 4-2 defeat Thursday afternoon at the Korakuen stadium. The consequence was that the Giants, idle fo the day, leaped into the lead of the standings of the professional league with a half game margin over Nagoya.

Three costly errors accounted for three of the four Dolfins' runs.

The Tigers hit ball hard when hits meant runs and routed the Eagles 9 to 1 in the other game.

Six runs in the third inning clinched victory for the Tigers. One of them was a homer into the left field bleachers by Third Baseman Igauye

Over at the Nishinomiya stadium in the Kansai, the Senators from Tokyo bombarded Pitcher Shimizu for 10 hits and swamped Nankai 7 to 0, while the Hankyu combine of Osaka nosed out the Lions from Tokyo, 5 to 4.

The summaries follow:

		R	H	E
Dolfins	100 110 100	4	5	1
Nagoya	000 010 100	2	5	3

Batteries: Furutani, Nakayama and Nagashima; Nishizawa, Matsuo, Muramatsu and Hattori, Miura.

Eagles	000 010 000	1	7	3
Tigers	006 300 00a	9	9	0

Batteries: Nakagawa, Hasegawa and Kiyoiye; Miwa, Kameda and Tanaka.

Lions	010 002 001	4	8	5
Hankyu	000 001 40a	5	10	4

Batteries: Fukushi and Hirota; Mori and Inokawa.

Senators	003 000 040	7	10	1
Nankai	000 000 000	0	6	2

Batteries: Asaoka and Sato; Shimizu and Sano.

The standings follow:

FIGHTS TUESDAY

technique reminding of Hector Berlioz, are treated with a scrutiny that exhausts their effect. But too much repetition lengthens his works beyond reasonable limits and in the end creates monotony.

PERFORMANCE EXCELLENT

The vivid performance given by the New Symphony Orchestra deserves every praise. Special mention is due to Kenshu Wanibuchi's rendition of the violin solo in the second movement, and to tympanist Sotaro Komori's excellent work in the third movement.

Yasuki Kiyose's Japanese Dance Suite, in five movements: Allegro rustico; Andante tranquillo; Allegretto ritmico; Andante quasi recitativo; Allegro animato—tries to be thoroughly Japanese, not only in the choice of its thematic material, which is taken from such forms of Japanese music as Kagura, Dengaku, Gagaku, and Noh, but even in harmonic, treatment, based on what is called harmony of fifths and fourths, avoiding the third, so indispensable in European harmony, as a means of building harmonic chords. But for Western ears, music without Western harmonic treatment and thematic elaboration is interesting only as long as it arrests the ear through the effect of its very exoticism, and as soon as this effect is overused, little interest remains. Thus, again, montony is produced in spite of some charming Japanese characteristics of the music.

Motosaku Akiyoshi (better known under the name of Shukichi Mitsukuri) presented an overture which is originally to be the first movement of a symphony, of which the second and third movements are to be completed during this and the next year, respectively. The composer attempts, with a certain degree of success, to write music based on Western patterns of form, adding a Japanese flavor in typical melodical and rhythmical phrases.

U.S. Unimpressed

NEW YORK, April 2—American papers are showing little sign of being impressed by the recently issued German White Paper, which claims that the United States caused the outbreak of the present war. The New York Herald Tribune makes fun of the whole business. "Nobody in Germany wanted or dreamt of war," it says. "Mr. Hitler sought only peace: Austria and Poland were invaded in the cause of peace. When the Allies refused to accept at its face value the truly pacific nature of these efforts, the United States put it into their head that the bombing of Warsaw and the invasion of Poland would be acts of war.

"The conclusion is inescapable, if it had not been for the Americans the Allies would have accepted the occupation of Poland as just another friendly flight of the dove of peace!"

BRITAIN TO PUSH ECONOMIC WAR WITH NEW VIGOR

Chamberlain Gives Address To House of Commons; Says Blunt Peace to Be Shunned

Domei Tsushin

LONDON, April 2—Announcement of Britain's determination to prosecute the economic war against Germany with increasingly greater vigor, together with another definite statement that the Allies are bound not to make peace with the Reich except through a common understanding with Poland, was one of the highlights of the address Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain made in the House of Commons this afternoon.

Neutral nations—especially those adjacent to Germany were warned by Mr. Chamberlain that any economic aid to the Reich from them might eventually lead them to share the fate of becoming victims of Nazi-ism. He said Britain is prepared to enforce an embargo on the sale of Empire products to Germany's neutral neighbors unless they are able to provide guarantees to limit their future trade with Germany. The British fleet has already taken practical steps to interfere with the passage of German cargo ships returning from Scandinavia, while other similar measures are under the Government's consideration, he said.

WAR SUMMARIZED

The Prime Minister began with a summarized survey of the recent Supreme War Council session, which, he said, undertook a review of the latest developments in the strategic situation. He said this was not the occasion to reveal the decisions reached at the meeting but added he supposed the House would have no great difficulty in guessing the general nature of the discussions.

He went on to mention that in recent months the state of collaboration and unity of purpose between Britain and France has been growing ever closer. "We have expanded our arrangements to cover commercial questions, the supply of munitions and the closest cooperation in the colonial sphere," he said. "By solemn declaration, our two Governments have now extended the scope of these arrangements to all spheres affecting the interests and security of the two nations."

After reading out the two Powers' joint declaration of March 28, the Prime Minister continued: "It goes far beyond an expression of Anglo-French determination to fight together to a common victory. It provides for continuous Anglo-French cooperation in the establishment of peace and in the reconstruction of international order designed to ensure the liberties of peoples, respect for law and the maintenance of peace in Europe. The first salient feature of the declaration is that any proposals for peace—whatever their source—would not ever be discussed before this country and France have reached a full agreement on the requirements of true peace safeguarding their own security and that of other free nations of Europe. After the conclusion of peace, the Anglo-French community of action will be maintained in all spheres so long as may be necessary to perfect and consolidate the reconstruction of Europe."

Dealing again with the Supreme War Council, the Prime Minister said the picture presented to the Allies at present was one of Germany putting its own interpretation on the obligations of the neutrals and accompanying it with threats of dire consequences which might result to them from failure to comply with the German demands. "This problem which Germany has raised, of a double standard of morality, is one which we and the neutrals now have to face," he said.

NEUTRALS RESPECTED

"The policy of the Allies has been determined by a scrupulous regard for neutral rights whereas Germany has not hesitated to destroy neutral property and to murder the nationals of neutral States wherever it suited their policy to do so. She has not scrupled to threaten the invasion of neutral countries in order to prevent them from taking steps to assist their neighbors against aggression or to protect their own interests.

"Our respect for neutral rights and our sympathy for the practical difficulties of the neutral States, however, must not blind us to the fact that any aid they may give Germany might, if carried far enough, render them in the end liable to the hideous fate that has overtaken previous victims of German policy. If we are to bring this war to a close with the least possible destruction and dislocation of our common spiritual and material civilization, we must deprive Germany of the materials most essential for the prosecution of her aggressive policy. The Allies therefore are determined to prosecute the economic war to the utmost of their power. Already much has been accomplished."

After referring to the successful negotiation of new war trade agreements between Britain and several foreign countries, the Prime Minister announced that another such agreement with Denmark is being signed at the Foreign Office this afternoon. "Discussions are also taking place in Paris looking toward the conclusion of a similar agreement between the Allies and Switzerland," he went on. "Also, important commercial agreements have been reached with Spain, Greece, Turkey."

The Prime Minister welcomed the visit to London of the vice-governor of the Jugoslav National Bank and mentioned that a mission is expected shortly from Rumania and another visit at the end of this week of the French Minister of Blockade, Georges Monnet.

"All the war trade agreements in which we have agreed to take part contain stipulations regulating the exports of neutral countries of their own domestic produce to Germany," he explained. "British trade with a number of Germany's neutral neighbors is undoubtedly capable of being substantially developed.

MUTUAL BENEFIT

"I look forward to an intensification of trade exchanges to our mutual benefit. At the same time, the countries concerned must realize that we cannot agree to make available to them products drawn from Empire sources unless in return they are prepared to give guarantees as to the limitation of their future trade with Germany. The stipulations in the trade agreements we have entered into provide for strict limitation of exports to Germany of fats, which are essential for her war effort.

"Another weapon in our armory is that of purchase. Concentration on the buying of certain selected commodities such as minerals, fats and oils, etc. from Germany's neighbors is to an ever increasing extent reducing the supply of these commodities available to Germany.

"We have completed arrangements to purchase the entire exportable surplus of Norway's current catch of whale-oil. The Allies' purchases of minerals in Southeastern Europe have been on a large scale. Most important of all weapons of our economic warfare is the employment of our sea power. The Allies are determined to continue and to intensify their use of this weapon to the full. His Majesty's ships already have taken certain practical steps to interfere with the passage of German cargo ships from Scandinavia. These operations, carried out in close proximity to German naval bases, show again how empty are Germany's boasts that the control of the North Sea has passed into their hands. Other measures are under consideration. We have not yet reached the limit of our effective operations in this region."

Referring to the possibility of Germany finding ways to increase her supplies from neutrals by overland routes, the Prime Minister declared toward the end of his speech, "We have carefully reviewed the situation and intend to take suitable measures."

Then after a reference to the interception of Soviet vessels suspected of carrying contraband for Germany via Vladivostok, the Prime Minister turned to Southeastern Europe and said, "It has even been suggested by German propaganda that it is our aim to disturb the peace of the Balkans. This of course is not true, and we are confident that our agreements with Turkey, on the contrary, have contributed most effectively toward the maintenance of peace and security in Southeastern Europe."

Guitarist Fujimura Heard in Recital

Beethoven, Bach, and Schubert compositions transcribed for the guitar were heard at a recital given by Kan Fujimura, guitarist, Tuesday night, at the Meiji Seimei Hall.

Apart from the artistic and musical questionability of such an attempt, the Adagio sostenuto from Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata, which opened the program, is hardly suitable for a guitar transcription. Two Preludes and an Allemande by Bach fared much better. The polyphonic style of Bach's music may well be brought out on the guitar, whose sound color somewhat resembles that of the cembalo. However, guitarist Fujimura's technique proved not sufficient for the task of playing this music. Rhythmical unfirmness and discontinuity of the harmonic line marred the impression of his performances. This was particularly disturbing in some popular Schubert numbers he played.

Altogether, the Spanish numbers by Tarrega and Albeniz, original compositions for the guitar, gave Mr. Fujimura a better opportunity to show his somewhat limited facilities; they are the proper element of guitar music and made him feel more in his own element. A large audience, presumably composed in the majority of guitar amateurs, applauded each of his numbers, in particular two melodies composed by himself. (H.E.P.)

Swiss Trade Report For 1938 Published

The "Swiss Federation of Commerce and Industry" has just published its annual Report on Swiss Trade and Industry during the year 1938. The abundance of economic facts and figures will enable any foreign reader to obtain an insight into Swiss economic conditions.

As formerly, the general part of the Report contains a succinct statement about certain important questions concerning prices, commercial policy and political economy.

Then follows a statistical part, giving all the most important data about the different branches of Swiss economics, such as: population, waterpower, factories, labor questions, cost of living, banking, foreign trade and finance.

The greater part of the volume is devoted to special reports in the individual branches of trade and industry, on traffic, insurance and banking, on production and distribution of electric energy and on technical and commercial education.

The report appears like last year in a French and in a German edition and may be obtained at the reduced price of Swiss francs 5.—(plus postage) from the "Secretariat of the Swiss Federation of Commerce and Industry," Borsenstrasse 17.

Teidai Nine Beaten By Ritsumeikan, 3-1

Five costly errors proved too much for Pitcher Tsutomu Kida of Tokyo Imperial University and he suffered a 3-1 setback at the hands of the Ritsumeikan University squad of the Kansai Friday afternoon at the Meiji Shrine stadium.

The Tokyo collegians also showed a weakness at bat, Kida, himself, registering three of the six hits off Uychara of the visiting nine.

The summaries:

Ritsumeikan	000 120 000	3	6	2
Teidai	000 100 000	1	6	5

Batteries: Uychara and Ito; Sato, Kida and Kitano, Kondo.

Manchou Held Courageous

to the Department of Public Peace attracted considerable attention by declaring that the object of military education in Manchoukuo is to train and organize such an army as will be capable of uniting with the Japanese Army under the sole command of the Commander-in-chief of the Kwantung Army. His statement was construed as revelation of the intention of the Manchoukuo Government to bring its army under unified Japanese command to cooperate with the Kwantung Army in any national emergency in the future. At the same conference plans for promulgating shortly a Military Education Ordinance were also announced. The object of this ordinance is to imbue the Manchoukuo Army with the spirit underlying the foundation of the new State, and to train it so as to display its special characteristics as the National Army.

Means of guidance and enlightenment of the public in connection with the enforcement of the National Army Law also formed the chief topic of discussion at the conference early this week of central and provincial leaders of the Concordia Association, the sole political organization in Manchoukuo, devoted at present to the enhancement of racial harmony and of the national spirit. The important role the Concordia Association could play in making the conscription system a success was emphasized by its speakers. One speaker, for instance, declared that the Hsieh-ho-hui should correctly grasp the psychology of the people, and seize every possible opportunity for inculcating among the masses a sound conception of military service, so that voluntary cooperation would be offered by them. Officials of the Association were also called upon to gauge the attitude of local inhabitants toward the projected scheme of service, so that measures could be quickly formulated to meet any possible contingency.

FOSTERING OF SYMPATHY

The fostering of mutual sympathy and respect among civil and military circles, and assistance to the families of the enlisted, both spiritual and material, through the medium of the Hsieh-ho-hui were also urged. The Concordia Association as the only national organization of the people is destined to play a vital role in the enforcement of military service.

The projected conscription formed an important item of discussion also at the conference of provincial governors here on Tuesday and Wednesday. Premier Chang Ching-hui in his opening address instructed the governors to make every possible effort to enable the nation fully to understand the objects of this new system in order to ensure its smooth enforcement. These objects, he stressed, were to reorganize and strengthen the National Army and to educate and train soldiers to become the backbone of the nation.

Dealing at greater length, Minister of Public Peace General Yu declared that national defence must be made a joint responsibility of the entire nation. The most important need of the moment was to secure fine young men for improving the quality of the Army and raising the character of the soldiers, so that a "powerful, crack national army, with self-confidence and commanding the reliance of others, may be formed for joint defence of the Empire in an hour of emergency under the principle of Japan-Manchoukuo co-defence.

"The fundamental principle in improving the National Army consists in securing fine young men, which in turn depends upon accurate investigations by hsien and banner chiefs, and mayors of cities, and upon their fair and impartial judgment based on justice", he stated.

The projected military service will be applicable to all male subjects of Manchoukuo who have attained the full age of 19 years. By Manchoukuo subjects will be meant those who are domiciled in Manchoukuo, that is those who make their living in this country. As regards Japanese (including Koreans), their volunteer service is to be accepted. Conscription will be restricted to active service. The term of service is three years, but may, under certain specified circumstances, be shortened.

Export-Import Bank Lends 11 Million to South America

Domei Tsushin

WASHINGTON, April 4—The Export-Import Bank, in a move to bolster American trade in South America, has granted $11,000,000 in credits to several Latin American nations, including a $5,000,000 credit to Colombia, Mr. Jesse H. Jones, Federal Loan Administrator, revealed today.

Details of the loans made to other South American states were not revealed. The credits were made possible by Congress' approval of the bill which increased the lending authorization of the Export-Import Bank by $100,000,000. Of this amount $20,000,000 has been extended to Finland, a similar amount to China, $15,000,000 to Sweden and $10,000,000 to Norway.

15,000 China Coolies Entering Manchoukuo Daily from Shantung

An average daily inflow of 15,000 Chinese coolies from Shantung province to Manchoukuo has been witnessed of late via Dairen, Yingkow and Shanhaikwan, reports from Hsinking say.

Approximately 4,000 have recently been arriving daily at Dairen by sea from Lungkou, Chefoo, Weihaiwei and Tsingtao, 8,000 via Shanhaikwan from Tientsin and Tsinan, and 3,000 at Yingkow from Shantung ports. During March, nearly 400,000 of them came to the country, it is said.

With already a considerable number of coolies from Mukden, Hsinking and Harbin moving to the northern region for various construction works there, almost half a million men are expected to be transported to the north during this month. The General Directorate of Railways has decided to mobilize possible railway facilities and steamers on the Sungari for their transportation during this month and May.

tian principles and it would mean the death of all our democratic principles. That must not be, he concluded. We shall act with such energy that there will be no blackout of civilization. The Allied cause which is the cause of liberty will triumph."

U.S. TO BE CHEATED?

BERLIN, April 4—The Anglo-French Allies are planning to revise the strictures of the Versailles Treaty and to lure the United States into the war through Sumner Welles, according to authoritative circles and the press here today.

This reaction was due to the publication of a photograph showing the United States Undersecretary of State, M. Reynaud and the American Charge d'Affaires, Mr. Murphy, in Paris before a map in M. Reynaud's office. It was alleged here that the United States is to be "cheated" again.

The map shows Silesia and East Prussia as part of Poland. Other parts of Germany were divided between Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Poland, and Bavaria. It is said that, just as President Wilson was cheated in 1916, so M. Reynaud has now presented the Allied war aims to Mr. Welles.

GERMAN STORY DENIED

PARIS, April 4—German allegations that the Allies are planning extensive partitioning of Germany are ridiculed here. The authorities point out that the allegations are based on the publication of a photograph in a French periodical of the Premier M. Reynaud, and the American Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles with a map in the background.

The map, it was pointed out, was an old 1914 one, and the drawing of the frontiers was the result of a poor retouching job of the artist of the periodical.

'MAP MYSTERY' SEEN

WASHINGTON, April 4 — The "map mystery" today provoked Congressional demands for an examination of Mr. Welles on the war aims of the Allies, as to whether they plan to carve Germany when victorious.

Publication of the photograph is providing considerable argument, it is commented, since the German White Book seems to have worn itself out in the allegations which were charged last week and will doubtless be charged next week if the second White Book is published.

Airmail Service Reopened

LONDON, April 4—The Empire air service between England and South Africa was fully restored this week, it has been announced here. There will be two return flights weekly, as before the war. It is understood that British civilian air services will also be extended to Spain, Portugal and the Balkans.

At the outbreak of the war air mail services to the Continent were suspended, but in October the air services were reopened to France, Belgium, Holland and Scandinavia.

The Empire air mail service was not discontinued, though it was curtailed, and despite increase in postal charges, this surcharged traffic has continued to grow in volume.

GIANTS BEAT TIGERS, 3-1 TO KEEP LEAD

Behind the airtight pitching of Victor Stalphin, the Giants trounced the Tigers, 3 to 1, Sunday afternoon at the Korakuen stadium to maintain their lead in the professional baseball circuit. The big Russian twirler checked the Tigers to five hits.

Stalphin and Kinoshita engaged in a pitching duel for the first six innings with the count at 1-all. This calmness was punctured by a dispute for 15 minutes over a smash over the left field fence near the pole demarking the foul line by Shortstop Mimakawa of the Tigers in the seventh inning after two outs. The Tigers yelled in joy acclaiming it a homer, which would mean a 2-1 lead, but Base Umpire Sawa ruled it a foul. Manager Matsuki and Captain Wakabayashi of the Tigers protested but the three umpires, getting together, stuck to the foul decision.

The Giants clinched the game by scoring one run off Wakabayashi, who had relieved Kinoshita on the mound after one out in the seventh frame. Yoshiwara walked and was sacrificed to second by Stalphin. Chiba singled sharply to right field, and Yoshiwara dashed all the way home. The peg to the plate was good and it might have nabbed the runner but Backstop Tanaka seemingly had a lapse in memory and caught the ball several steps in front of the plate and made no attempt to tag the runner.

Ted Kameda's three-hit pitching aided the Eagles to down the Dolfins, 4-0 in the other game at the Korakuen stadium.

Over in the Kansai, Nankai nosed out the Lions, 3-2, while the Senators blanked Hankyu, 2-0.

Norway's Views

lations of our neutrality, from whichever quarter they might come. The Government can come to no other conclusion, but that the British Government, after considering what has occurred, will admit that it was in direct contravention of those principles which it has itself so often proclaimed. Norway is, as the Prime Minister said, a small state, and she cannot base her right on might. But she has believed that great nations would take a pride in safeguarding the rights of the smaller countries just as for the larger countries. Norway will at least, as long as her voice can be heard, raise it in defense of right, and she hopes that the world will acknowledge the justice of her cause in this instance as so often before. If need arise, Norway can lay the matter before the League of Nations or before such tribunal as may be set up. But in any case we feel confident that a violation of our neutrality, such as we have just been the victims of, will be judged by public opinion in all countries.

BEHIND ATTITUDE

"Hambro: Behind the attitude adopted by the Norwegian Government in this conflict, and behind the protest which the Norwegian Government has lodged, stands a unanimous Parliament and a united nation. And in our deep consternation at the violation of Norwegian neutrality and Norwegian territorial waters by British naval forces, we share the Foreign Minister's hope that a calm and efficient presentation of the facts on the part of Norway will win the understanding and the sympathy of the larger country.

"At a time when the very hopes of future international cooperation are threatened, no irresponsible act of armed violence should jeopardise a longstanding friendship between two democratic nations. They are both bound to follow the rules of International Law in any conflict that might arise between them. They are both bound by the duties entailed by membership of the League of Nations, and the rights of the smaller state are as inviolable as those of the larger. And when Norway demands reparation and in future respect for her territory and her neutrality, we trust that the English nation and the English authorities will show the sympathy to which Norway is entitled both by her attitude today and her historical past.

"The President: The President assumes, with regard to the Foreign Minister's statement, that the House unanimously approves President Hambro's words on the recent incident."

THE ALTMARK QUESTION

"As it is known already, the Norwegian Government handed a protest to the British Government on the 11th of this month, against the violator of Norwegian neutrality by British naval forces during the night between the 16th and the 17th February, when they boarded the German State-vessel Altmark in the Jossingfjord. (The Altmark is indicated in the official list of ships belonging to the German navy as a "Cross-schiff"). By this action seven Germans lost their lives and some were wounded, while about 300 British prisoners on board the Altmark were transferred to the British men-of-war and taken away.

The British Foreign Minister admitted that a technical violation of Norwegian neutrality had been made and declared that the action had been undertaken with the full assent of the British Government. He pointed out that the Norwegian Government ought to have subjected the Altmark to a most careful search at Bergen and that the British Government would be grateful to receive detailed information as to how the examination had been conducted and as to the facts which were discovered. He went on to say that the investigations seemed to have been very superficial and that the Norwegian Government thus had failed to fulfil her obligations as a neutral.

On the 20th February, in the afternoon, the British Minister in Oslo gave the Foreign Minister, M. Koht, an account of the conversation between Lord Halifax and the Norwegian Minister on the 17th in connection with the Norwegian protest in the case.

After having collected further information in the matter, the Norwegian Government have now brought to the knowledge of the British Foreign Minister, through their Minister in London, that the Altmark was visited by a Norwegian torpedo-boat in Norwegian territorial waters off Kristiansund on the 14th, just after she had entered Norwegian waters. On questions put by the Norwegian Commanding Officer the Captain of the Altmark declared that the ship was on her way from an American port (Port Arthur in Texas) to Germany.

"The Altmark was armed with small anti-aircraft guns for purposes of self defense. The guns, however, had been dismounted before the ship entered Norwegian territorial waters. The ship carried the "Reichsdienstflagge" indicating that she belonged to the German Government. Some distance further southwards the ship was hailed again by another Norwegian torpedoboat. Among other questions the Captain of the ship was asked whether there were any persons on board belonging to the armed forces of another belligerent or seamen resident in or nationals of another belligerent country. To these questions the Captain answered: No.

When the Altmark later on was hailed for a third time by a Norwegian warship North of Bergen, the Captain refused to have the ship searched on the ground that she had already been visited and that she belonged to the German Government. As the Altmark was an auxiliary of the fleet and consequently had the same immunities as a warship, the Norwegian authorities were not, according to International Law, entitled to make further investigations, nor were they entitled to prevent the ship from continuing her voyage through Norwegian territorial waters. It must be emphasized that the Altmark has not called at Bergen or at any other Norwegian port or anchorage, as the British Government seem to have supposed. Consequently there can be no question of applying the 24-hour limit in this case.

STIPULATE NO LIMIT

Neither the Hague Convention No. XIII nor the Norwegian neutrality rules of 1938 stipulate any time limit as far as passage is concerned. The transport of prisoners through neutral waters by a belligerent State's warships or prizes is not contrary to International Law. This is recognized theory of International Law. Norway had neither the right nor the duty to interfere and investigate whether there were prisoners on board, nor, eventually, to release the prisoners during the ship's passage.

As the Altmark did not call at Norwegian ports the Norwegian Government have had no reason to make up their mind as to what would have had to be done with the ship or the prisoners if such call had taken place. Generally speaking it can be said that the Norwegian Government in this case would have endeavored to fulfil all international obligations. The British Government themselves have strongly insisted upon the right of passage for belligerent warships through neutral waters. This was done for instance in their observations of May 23rd, 1939, to the Norwegian neutrality rules.

The Norwegian Government have pointed out to the British Government that it was their duty to observe the rules of International Law correctly to both sides, and as to these rules there can be no doubt. When it is emphasized on British side that the prisoners were badly treated and that Norway should have taken the humanitarian aspect into consideration, the Norwegian Government would like to add that they can understand the British feelings at the thought of British prisoners being on board. However, in the opinion of the Norwegian Government it would be necessary for a neutral State to be able to refer to a definite rule in a treaty or recognized International Law if they were to take action against belligerent or to interfere in a case between them.

The Norwegian Government have further expressed the hope that the British Government, in the light of the information given, would feel convinced that the Norwegian Government strictly have observed International Law in this case. If, however, the British Government should maintain their view, the Norwegian Government would propose that the differences of opinion between the two Governments should be submitted to arbitration. The form of procedure would have to be agreed upon by the two Governments.

NORWAY SUGGESTS

The Norwegian Government have suggested that in their opinion the questions to be put to the arbitral tribunal might be formulated as follows:

Was Norway according to International Law entitled and obliged to

(a) visit and search the Altmark, and in doing so to establish whether there were prisoners on board,

(b) prevent the continued passage of the Altmark through Norwegian waters, and

(c) demand the handing over of the British prisoners on board the Altmark, and if necessary, to release them by force?

If any of the questions (a) to (c) are answered to Norway's disfavor: Did this, according to International Law, entitle Great Britain to take action by using force against the Altmark in Norwegian territorial waters and to release the prisoners, as actually happened?

Cromwell to Enter Senatorial Race

Transocean

WASHINGTON, March 27—James Cromwell, U. S. Minister to Canada, who created a stir by his anti-German speech, declared on his return to Ottawa that he had no other plans but to conduct the affairs of his Legation.

It is reported that his contemplated visit of President Roosevelt would not take place before next week owing to the President's sudden illness.

It became known in Democratic circles of the New Jersey Senate that Cromwell would announce next week his candidature for the post of Senator for New Jersey. The delay in his interview with President Roosevelt is described in Democratic circles as "favorable for Cromwell."

HAYNIE WINS 220-YD. TITLE IN NEW YORK

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, April 6—Tom Haynie, captain of the great Michigan swimming team of 1939 and leading individual performer last year, won the 220-yard freestyle in 2 minutes 13.4 seconds on the first day of the two-day National Amateur Athletic Union Indoor Swimming Championships which opened at the New York Athletic Club pool today. Haynie, who represented the Detroit Athletic Club, stayed off all the way through the first 150 yards and just came up at the finish to nip Otto Jaretz, of the Medinah Club, Chicago.

Other first place winners were:

400-yard relay: Michigan University 3 min. 35.2 sec.; 220-yard breaststroke: Richard Hough, of Princeton A.A. 2 min. 40.8 sec.; 300-yard Individual relay: Adolph Kiefer, of Chicago Tower Club 3 min. 29.6 sec.; 1 meter board diving: Al Patnik, of Ohio State University 143.88 points.

Richard Hough, of Princeton University who pressed Haynie closely for individual honors last year, went the first length of the 25-yard pool under water and easily defeated John Higgins, of Ohio State University, by four feet.

In the 300-yard medley event, Kiefer started off the first 100 yards with a breaststroke. Defending champion Clark, of Wayne University, took the lead, but Kiefer was all alone after he turned over to use the backstroke and won by eight yards.

Michigan University and Ohio State University tied for first place with 11 points on the first day.

U.S. Tenant Farmers Warned To Avoid Pacific States

Transocean

WASHINGTON, March 29—Do not go to the Pacific Coast states because there is no employment for you there: there is already an excess of farmhands in the western states, the 3,950,000 itinerant American farming families were told today in a circular letter distributed by the Department of Labor.

In commenting upon this letter, the Washington Telegram asserted that the distress among these wandering laborers has become great.

NEW YORKER WINS TABLE TENNIS TITLE

Domei Tsushin

INDIANAPOLIS, April 8—Little Louis Pagliaro, of New York, 6th ranking American table tennis player, yesterday won the United States open table tennis title during the finals of the 10th National Table Tennis Championships which were concluded last night. The tournament began last Friday at Tomlinson Hall.

Pagliaro downed his teammate, Solly Schiff, 5th ranking player, 21-16, 21-18, 11-21, 21-16.

In the women's singles, Sally Green, 2nd ranking Westerner from this city, defeated Ruth Brewer, 3rd ranking Easterner from New York, in four hard fought games, 21-17, 21-17, 16-21, 21-13. She became the new national women's title holder succeeding Emily Fuller, the 1939 champion, probably one of the best women players ever developed, and who retired from active competition this year.

The men's doubles was won by the veteran pair, Solly Schiff and America's No. 1 player, Jimmy McClure, who defeated Paul Capelle and Don Klepak, 21-14, 21-15, 17-21, 21-14.

The West scored its second triumph when the women's doubles title went to Sally Green and Mildred Wilkinson. After losing the first two games, they came from behind to defeat Marjorie Leary and Helen Baldwin by the scores of 20-22, 21-23, 21-7, 21-11, 23-21.

The Hungarian mixed doubles combination of Tibor and Magda Gal Hazi, winners of over a thousand tournament matches, easily swept through all competition and defeated the American pair, Bob Anderson and Miss Rolph, to win in straight games, 21-14, 24-22, 21-13.

The United States Table Tennis Association has been invited by the Japan T.T.A. to send teams to Japan in May and June to compete in several international matches.

AUSTRALIA PREPARES

CANBERRA, April 1—The Minister for Air, Mr. Fairbairn, has announced that 48 specialists of the Royal Air Force in Britain have arrived in Australia to help in the Empire air training scheme. They include 17 specialists in armaments, signalling and equipment.

As the first special entry for the Empire air training scheme, 96 pilot trainees will be called upon on April 2, it was revealed. Mr. Fairbairn stated that selected air-crew trainees would enter initial training schools for four weeks' preliminary instruction, during which period they would be finally classified for training as pilots, observers and wireless air gunners. A percentage would be transferred to Canada to complete their training, but by far the greatest proportion would be completely trained in Australia.

RECRUITING IN AFRICA

PRETORIA, April 6—Recruiting in South Africa is going steadily ahead, it is reported here, and a regiment named after the Union's first Prime Minister has now brought two battalions up to war strength and a third battalion is being formed. Another regiment is the Imperial Light Horse.

A large number of Rhodesian infantry have been posted to well-known British regiments. Their identity will be clear from a distinctive badge which they will wear.

314,000 REGISTER

LONDON, April 7—A total of 314,000 men of the 25 years age group registered for service last night. Before the end of this month the 26 year age group will also be called up, which will bring the total number of registered men to 2,000,000.

British Marine Minister Dies

LONDON, March 30—Sir John Gilmour, Minister of Merchant Marine, died here today at the age of 63.

The deceased had a brilliant parliamentary career, having served as Junior Lord of the Treasury, Secretary for Scotland and Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries.

GRAND ABE MISSION TO CHINA SEEN AS THIRD OF SIZE IN JAPAN'S HISTORY

When General Nobuyuki Abe, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary Pro Tem leaves for his post next week, he and his delegation will board the Kashima Maru sailing from Kobe on April 18. With all first and second class cabins reserved for the "grand" delegation, the trip promises to be an eventful one.

According to the Asahi, this will be the third great official mission to leave Japan's shores. The first famous one was Prince Kinmochi Saionji's peace delegation to the Paris Peace Conference which sailed in December, 1918. Count Shinken Makino was the chairman of the party.

The second was the late Viscount Makoto Saito's party to the Three Power (Japan, England, U.S.) Arms Conference in Geneva in 1927. The gala sendoff when the party left on the N.Y.K. liner, the Awa Maru at that time, was not unlike the grand reception to be given General Abe's suite.

At the Toa Kaiun Kaisha (Toa Shipping Company) owner of the Kashima Maru, everyone from president of the company to the steward on the ship is busy making preparations for the departure.

There was much discussion in the selection of a suitable vessel for the dignitaries. Besides General Abe and the 28 other official delegates there will also be representatives from the Upper and Lower Houses, notables of the financial and political world and newspaper reporters, numbering more than 100 in all. The Kashima Maru was chosen after much deliberation, even though its regular schedule will have to be disrupted.

The ship was orginally scheduled to sail from Shanghai on April 15 and reach Kobe on the 18th. It was supposed to stay at dock for one week and sail on its regular route for Shanghai again on the 25th. However, plans were changed so that the vessel will now leave Shanghai on April 14, and reach Kobe by noon on the 17th. Barely 24 hours later, the ship will sail with General Abe's party at noon, April 18.

The Kashima Maru will also take an extra load of fuel and will run direct from Kobe to Shanghai, instead of making its regular stops at Moji and Nagasaki.

With the departure so close at hand, all hands have been at work day and night in getting General Abe's special suite decorated and cleaned. The Toa Kaiun Kaisha is also sending its best cabin boys and managers to offer special services for the trip.

Hawaii Versus Japan Fight Card Tonight

It's a case of Hawaii versus Japan in an attractive boxing card tonight at the Korakuen stadium, weather permitting.

The three fighters imported from Hawaii by Promoter Kintaro Usuda are all participating.

Charles Higa, nisei flyweight scrapper, is out to redeem himself of his defeat at the hands of Saburo Isegawa of the Kansai on March 19, but he meets a tough boy in Shoichi Otsu, former bantamweight champion of Japan. Otsu is favored to win. The bout is slated to go eight rounds.

Kid Felipe, Filipino featherweight, comes with an impressive record, is a hard hitter, and is a slight favorite over Susumu Tokunaga of the Dai Nippon Boxing Club over 10 rounds.

Jerry Summerford, lanky Negro, is plenty confident but he may find the experienced Matsuo (Tiger) Amino just a bit too tough for him. This a ten-rounder.

The first of four preliminaries will start at 6 p.m. sharp.

Iwao Kongo, Usuda's protege, takes on Yukio Miyabashi of the Dai Nippon Boxing Club in a 10-rounder on the same card.

NEW AMERICAN TRADE MERGER URGED AT MEET

Single System of Cable, Radio Companies Asked By F.C.C. in Washington

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON—A majority of the Federal Communication Commission favors consolidation of international radiotelegraph and cable companies into a United States system.

In a report recently to Senator Burton K. Wheeler (D) of Montana, Chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, the majority recommended legislation to permit such unification. The report said a minority of the Commission while concurring in most of the report, did not believe a single system was either justifiable or desirable.

The minority was not identified, but officials said it included T. A. Craven, Norman S. Case and Thad H. Brown. The other members are James Lawrence Fly, Chairman; Paul A. Walker, George Henry Payne, and Frederick I. Thompson.

In addition to Western Union, major international cable carriers are All American Cables & Radio, Inc.; Commercial Cable Company; the French Telegraph Company; Commercial Pacific Company. In 1938 these five companies had revenues of $16,613,263 from international operations, the report said.

Major radiotelegraph companies, in addition to R.C.A. Communications, are Globe Wireless, Ltd., Mackay Radio and Telegraph Company (California); Mackay Radio and Telegraph Company (Delaware); Inc.: Tropical Radio Telegraph Company, and United States-Liberia Radio Corporation. The Commission said their revenues totaled $23,436,404 in 1938.

The Commission early in January suggested legislation to permit consolidation of all domestic telegraph carriers into a single system, calling this "an obvious remedy for many of the existing ills" of the industry.

Consolidation of international telegraph service, embracing both cable and radio facilities, the majority said, would "best serve national needs; promote the national defense," and "provide a more effective device for securing equitable communication arrangements with foreign administrations."

The report said that the Western Union Telegraph Company handles the most business of the cable carriers in the international field and R.C.A. Communications, Inc., handles a slight majority of the business in the radiotelegraph field. Practically all business originating in terminating in, and transiting the United States is handled by 12 cable and radiotelegraph carriers.

"A review of the financial and operating status of the carriers engaged in international communication indicates that the cable carriers, although in past years having paid heavy returns on capital ... vested, are now in an unfavorable position," the report said.

It added that there is "undoubtedly a real need" for the continued operation of the cable system, but expressed doubt the cable carriers "can continue for long in the face of vigorous competition by the financially secure radio carriers and ever-growing radiotelephone and air mail services."

"The national public interest can hardly be served by a continuance of the helter-skelter method of development," the Commission majority said, contending that:

"The greatest guarantee of an efficient, broad, and secure American communications system lies in the combination of a strong, thoroughly sound, and financially successful concern operating under strict Government regulation in the light of national needs."

The minority suggested that "a limited amount of competition in the telegraph field will result more quickly in improve service at cheaper rates than would be the case under governmental regulation."

"It is further indicated," the minority said, "that a telegraph communication monopoly of cables and radio would make it more difficult to provide equitable arrangements between the United States and foreign correspondents."

Colliers' Editor Believes Germany Will Win War

Transocean

ST. PAUL, March 29—The editor of the well-known American weekly Colliers Magazine, W. B. Courtney, declared in an interview that Germany's chances to win this war had risen to 75 per cent. Courtney, who last year was in Germany, is now traveling in the United States for the purpose of studying the country's views on the European war.

Orient-Atlantic Shipping Schedule Returning to Normal

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, April 1—Japanese shipping schedules between Far Eastern ports and the Atlantic coast, which had fallen off sharply right after the expiration of the Japanese-American trade treaty, January 26, are returning to normal at a rapid rate, according to Japanese shipping offices here.

Ten vessels were en route from the Far East to New York during March. During February only four vessels arrived at New York from Japanese ports. This helps explain why the February silk arrivals were only 13,566 bales, the lowest since 1910.

Traders and businessmen engaged in trade with Japan have shifted to an attitude of optimism as contrasted to the quite black pessimism of a month ago, according to the Journal of Commerce. Although there has been no visible change in the situation, no move has been made in Washington toward imposing any punitive penalties on Japanese goods. The belief is growing, this paper said, that the "status quo" will be maintained for an indefinite period without any change in the treatyless condition created by abrogation of the treaty.

RIKKYO UPSETS WASEDA, 2-1; KEIO BEATS TEIDAI BY 4-3

Rikkyo sprung a surprise Tuesday afternoon in the opening doubleheader of the spring season of the Tokyo Six University Baseball league at the Meiji Shrine stadium by nosing out Waseda by a 2-1 score.

Keio, champions of the last fall season, had a close shave in the day's curtain-raiser, eking out a 4-3 victory over Teidai, Tokyo Imperial University, perennial cellar-holders, by a one-rally in the last half of the ninth inning.

30,000 SEE OPENING

Notwithstanding a week day, the stands were jammed to account for a crowd of more than 30,000. The grass bleachers in the centerfield area alone were empty.

Captain Hayafusa Saigo deserves the lion's share for Rikkyo's victory with his brilliant four-hit pitching. Ishiguro worked on the mound for Waseda and was touched for seven hits.

Rikkyo scored one run in the sixth to break the ice. Yamashita walked and went to second on Fukumura's sacrifice. Saigo singled to left to advance him to third. Saigo then stole second. Tabe walked to fill the bags. Ishiguro bore down and fanned Machida. Nakano waited out Ishiguro for a walk and Yamashita was forced in.

Waseda promptly deadlocked the count in their portion of the same inning on Matsui's long triple to right field which brought in Motohashi who had walked.

Neither team was able to score in the next two innings. Rikkyo scored what proved to be the winning run in the first half of the ninth. Third Baseman Minamimura scooped up Nakano's grounder but pegged wild to first and Nakano romped all the way to second. Shimakata was sent in to run for Nakano. Tsuji bunted in front of the plate and Shimakata advanced to third. A perfectly laid down bunt by Yamagata squeezed Shimakata home.

Teidai scored three runs of Right-hander Shiraki in the second inning before a putout to amaze the fans. Mitsutake poked a Texas Leaguer to left. Nakakura walked. Kida smashed a hot drive to left center. Centerfielder Nakada came in a bit too much to field it and he let it go through him for a triple to allow two runs. Kitano followed with a single to center to drive in Kida for the third run. Kawabata flied out to left. Kitano was thrown out stealing second. Tanaka struck out to retire the side.

Nakada partially redeemed himself in the last half of the third inning with a timely hit to center which brought in Shiraki from third for Keio's first run. Shiraki had gone all the way to second on the shortstop's wild throw to first. He then went to third as Miyazaki grounded out.

Keio registered another run in the fifth on Captain Kusumoto's hit through third, with Miyazaki romping all the way home from second.

KEIO TIES SCORE

Keio deadlocked the count in the seventh. It was Miyazaki again who got on with a hit to left after one out. He took second as Nakada grounded out to first. Shortstop Odate smashed a hit to center to bat in Miyazaki.

It was the same Miyazaki who paved the way to Keio's victory in the last half of the ninth inning. Masao Takagi, pinchhitting for Pitcher Shiraki, popped out to second, but Miyazaki earned a walk off Kida and promptly stole second. Nakada more than redeemed himself of the two runs he allowed Teidai in the first inning by coming through with a hit over second to bat in Miyazaki for the winning run.

Dutch Bacon Exports To Britain Decrease

Transocean

AMSTERDAM, March 28—British foreign exchange difficulties are being felt in an ever increasing degree by neutral shippers of foodstuffs to Britain.

The Allgemeen Handelsblad reports that a further considerable curtailment in British imports of Netherlands bacon must be reckoned with. To replace Netherlands bacon, the paper adds, the British Government intends to increase Canadian bacon import because the latter require no foreign exchange.

Up to 1933, Britain received average weekly shipments of 20,000 hogs from Holland, which yielded about 50,000,000 kilograms of bacon annually. As a result of the so-called voluntary quota system for British bacon imports, the Netherlands quota was reduced to 10,000 hogs per week. This level was retained for about five years. In 1939, however, bacon shortage made itself felt in Britain whereupon the average weekly imports of Netherlands hogs increased to nearly 14,000.

Recently Netherlands bacon exports to Britain have steadily decreased. Last week the number of Netherlands hogs shipped to Britain totaled only 6,500.

Negotiations are now being conducted to fix a new quota for Netherlands bacon imports, and it is feared in Holland that the British Government will insist on the new quota not exceeding 6,500 hogs per week. This would mean that this important Netherlands export business would be reduced to one-third the amount of normal years and to one half of last year's business.

From British Sources

territorial waters.

Reports have been received that, apart from the German troopship Rio de Janeiro which was torpedoed yesterday, two other German vessels and a submarine have been sunk by British submarines and destroyers. One of the German vessels, the Poscidon, 5,864 tons, was torpedoed at the mouth of the Oslo Fjord and the captain was taken prisoner on board the British submarine.

Unconfirmed wireless reports in the Norwegian language, which may be from German sources, state that the Germans have made landings on Norwegian territory at Bergen, Trondhjem and Narvik. These reports are discredited here for the most part, but the fall of Bergen is believed confirmed.

Gneisenau Sunk

STOCKHOLM, April 9—A German battle cruiser, thought to be the Gneisenau, is believed to have been sunk by shell fire from the coastal batteries in the Oslo Fjord, according to a report from Oslo.

Mines have already been laid in front of all important ports on the west coast of Norway and in the Skager Rack.

TWO SHOT DOWN

LONDON, April 9—German bombers again attempted to attack Scapa Flow last night, it was stated in a communique issued last night by the Air Ministry. Two German planes were shot down by Royal Air Force machines and a third was damaged by machine-gun fire and seen to dive toward the sea.

REICH PLANE DOWNED

LONDON, April 8—One German aircraft was shot down and another is believed to have been badly damaged in an encounter over the North Sea yesterday, when a number of German machines attacked a Royal Air Force bomber patrol, the Air Ministry announced yesterday. Two British Wellington bombers were also lost in the engagement, it was revealed.

Artillery Units Active

PARIS, April 8—There were heavy artillery exchanges along the Western Front yesterday, an official communique stated last night.

The communique also reported that at least five German planes were brought down during the day. Four of the planes were brought down by the French, and the fifth, a Messerschmidt 109, was shot down by a British fighter machine, all crashing in French territory.

ALLIED ACTION SUPPORTED

PARIS, April 8—The news that the Allies are now taking action to tighten the blockade in the North Sea is given a hearty welcome in France as in England. The general feeling of the ordinary man here is that at last the time has come for "showing our teeth."

41 GERMANS CAPTURED

LONDON, April 8—The arrival in a British coastal port of 41 German prisoners from a vessel which was scuttled when intercepted by a British warship is reported today. The crew had evidently had time to collect even their personal belongings before leaving their ship, as the officers and men were well dressed and carried suit cases, while several brought their blankets.

U.S. FREIGHTER STOPPED

SAN FRANCISCO, April 8—A message from Tacoma says that the United States freighter Wildwood (5,043 tons) has arrived in port with a cargo of over $4,000,000 worth of brass, copper and machinery. The ship left Norfolk, Virginia, for Vladivostock but the captain said that he was ordered in mid-Pacific to turn back by the ship's owners in New York.

The owners state that they gave orders for the vessel to return to the United States because of the British blockade in the Pacific.

HAWAII BOXERS DISAPPOINT 10,000 FANS

Ten thousand boxing fans trekked their way to the Korakuen stadium Tuesday night to take in the fight card ballyhooed as a Hawaii versus Japan all-star card and expected great things of at least two of the three visiting Honolulu scrappers but they were bitterly disappointed. They had seen Charles Higa, the only Nisei of the trio, outclassed by a Kansai boy on March 19, but Jerry Summerford, Negro, and Kid Felipe, Filipino, were making their debut. The latter two lost decisions on ten rounders.

Some of the Japanese scribes, who had seen the Honolulu trio in training, had predicted that the Filipino would take Susumu Tokunaga, a Korean. Well, this Honolulu pugilist might have a punch, as he is said to have, but he hardly laid a glove on Tokunaga during the entire 10 rounds. He simply was meeting a boy too good for him.

TOKUNAGA LANDS

Only in the first half of the first round was there any doubt as to the winner. Felipe proved to be a southpaw and Tokunaga was cautious. As they sparred for an opening, Felipe led with his left, telegraphed from a mile away, and he missed badly. Right at this point, Tokunaga had solved his opponent's tactics, and figuring his straight right was the quicker to find a target, stopped back-pedalling and jolted the, Filipino with a hard right to the jaw. And that is how the fight progressed. Credit must be given Felipe for trying all the way to score a knockout but his lefts were easily ducked by Tokunaga. And on such occasions, Tokunaga rocked him with rights and lefts to the head. The eighth and ninth rounds were especially big rounds for Tokunaga when he had the Filipino in a bad way.

Tokunaga weighed in at 125 pounds and Felipe at 126 pounds.

Matsuo (Tiger) Amino, veteran welterweight, was the aggressor all the way and won a deserving decision from Summerford. There is no question he packed a more stinging punch than Amino but the latter landed the more blows to the face, notwithstanding the colored boy's height advantage.

Summerford scored heavily in the second round with hard rights to the body. He followed with a left that shook Amino but the latter rallied and had Summerford covering up at the bell. Summerford might have won the fight had he taken the aggressive and centered his efforts on Amino's mid-section throughout the fight.

The third was a big round for Amino. The fourth was even. The fifth was another round for Amino when he set back Summerford on his heels with lefts and rights to the face. The sixth was a good round for Summerford when his rights to the body punished the Japanese boy. The seventh was another round for Amino. In the eighth, Amino caught Summerford with a right flush on the jaw from close distance and the colored fighter grimaced in pain.

Summerford tried hard in the ninth and tenth rounds but Amino managed to maintain his lead.

Summerford weighed in at 145 pounds and Amino at 147 pounds.

Higa's counter-punching wasn't good enough to beat Shoichi Otsu, former bantamweight champion of Japan. The fight over eight rounds was a draw. Higa weighed in at 105 pounds and Otsu at 115 pounds.

In the other ten rounder of the card, Iwao Kongo, 107 pounds, scored a one-sided decision over Ikuo Miyabashi, 117 pounds.

Kobe Collector

must be constantly on his guard, because any foreign wares are passed off as Dutch irrespective of the fact that many are of Nagoya manufacture bearing the mark 'made in Japan.' English porcelain of identical design, color and material to the Dutch blue and white were imported in great numbers at about the same time. The inevitable result of this was intense trade rivalry between the English and Dutch which existed from the time of the Tokugawa period. At this time the Dutch were the only foreigners privileged to carry on trade with Japan at Deshima, with the single exception of the Chinese. Sir Stamford Raffles made considerable efforts toward ousting the then Dutch resident at the factory at Deshima, Hendrick Doeff, who cleverly put off the English intrusion.

"Because English porcelain is of very similar material it is very difficult for ordinary collectors to distinguish different specimens. Most of them are freely passed as Dutch and sold in the curio shops as Dutch. They are of course old, and therefore interesting, but to the collector of the Dutch blue and white, constitute a difficulty. Most of the Dutch blue and white found in Japan are from Petrus Regout factory—established about 1770 as far as investigation reveals, and still in existence today in Maastricht, Holland.

KYUSHU INTERESTING

"The most interesting hunting ground is in Kyushu, although pieces are scattered all over the country now. Places where pioneer Dutch traders settled yield a richer harvest of course. The Japanese custom of carefully preserving these pieces by storing them away in old curio boxes, helped to keep many fine pieces intact through all the years. Later they strayed into junk-shops and ultimately into the eager hands of the collectors.

"To hunt all over the country whenever you have time to travel in the interior and to find something really rare and to purchase it at a mere 'song' is the fascination and pleasure that is the lot of the earnest collector in Japan."

Mr. C. Ailion now is preparing a book on porcelain, and is a member of the Kobe Art Lovers' Club.

COMPULSORY RICE MEASURE TO BE INVOKED

Dealers in Yamaguchi Prefecture Will Be Ordered To Sell Grain

The Agriculture and Forestry Ministry has decided to invoke for the first-time the right of effecting compulsory purchase of rice according to Article 4 of the Rice Distribution Control Law.

The decision is understood to have been made in view of the fact that the Government's program to buy rice amounting to 10,500,000 koku (one koku being about 4.96 bushels) has been brought to an impasse.

Despite the Government's efforts to adjust conditions of supply and demand of rice through reserving more than 10,000,000 koku of rice at hand, the situation is that the Government has bought only 5,500,000 koku of rice and there is almost no prospect for delivery of rice from producing districts to the Government.

Under these circumstances, Gunshi Takei, Governor of Yamaguchi prefecture, has recently requested the Government to invoke the right of compulsory purchase of rice because the Cooperative Societies there refuse to sell rice.

As a result, Agriculture and Forestry Minister Toshio Shimada permitted in notification dated April 11 Governor Takei to order rice dealers there to sell rice.

Governor Takei told the press Wednesday night:

"Whereas rice dealers in general in this prefecture, fully appreciating the national policy of Japan, are willingly selling rice to the Government, Cooperative Societies alone refuse to sell rice.

"Because I could not allow Cooperative Societies to take such an attitude, I have requested the Central Government to invoke the compulsory measures.

"I believe, however, that Cooperative Societies will not refuse to comply, if they realize that the actual situation is so acute as to require the invocation of compulsory measures.

"And so, I will not resort to the compulsory measure, though I have been permitted to do so, if they alter their attitude and act in concert with the national policy."

Britain Denies

avail against German policy if that policy demands otherwise."

The Foreign Secretary flatly denied the German claim that the German invasion had to be carried out as a sequel to the Allied laying of mines in Norwegian territorial waters in an attempt to prevent Swedish iron ore and other military supplies from being shipped to the Reich. He said he was confident that even Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels would have a hard time trying to convince the world that reduction of the independence of the two countries constituted a reasonable reprisal for the Allies' action. "The truth is that Germany's behavior is really that of a homicidal lunatic or of a mad dog that runs about biting where it may," he asserted.

If anything was needed to stiffen the British and French resolution to wage their war against Germany to a finish, then the Scandinavian events furnished that need, he went on. "Plainly, this war is not merely a struggle among the belligerents to solve their own issues," he said. "Upon the war hangs the fate not only of whose who are now in the conflict, but of all peoples who love liberty and who wish to preserve their independence."

SOVIET RELATIONS

Replying toward the end of his speech to the mooted question of the Allies' relations with the Soviet Union, the Foreign Secretary emphasized that Britain does not consider the matter solely against the background of the wanton Soviet attacks on Poland and Finland, but rather with an eye to the Allies principal objective, namely, that of defeating Germany.

"It follows then," he concluded, "that the future of our relations with Russia must and ought to depend more than anything else upon the degree of effective help she may for whatever reason wish to give Germany."

Hawaii Nisei Wins U.S. Amateur Boxing Title For Lightweights

Domei Tsushin

BOSTON, April 10—Paul Matsumoto, Hawaiian-born Japanese lightweight boxer, tonigh' won the 135-pound class championship, in the finals of the National Amateur Athletic Union's annual boxing championships which were held here. Matsumoto outpointed Tommy Moyer, of Portland, Oregon, to win the decision.

The other Japanese finalist, Yasuki Yasu'ake, in the 126-pound class, was no match for the speedy and clever Negro fighter, Frank Robinson, of Oil City, Pennsylvania, winner of the National Junior championship in 1939, who scored a quick knockout over the Japanese in the first round.

Emeny Sees

Flow.

Dr. Emeny sees little prospect that the current Scandinavian hostilities can be localized, as was the Finnish-Russian war, because the two major belligerents of the European conflict are more directly affected.

"At the same time, Sweden may find it impossible to avoid direct participation, because she is threatened constantly now with invasion, by one or both sides."

This development in what already has been classed as a "strange" war will serve to further emphasize the virtual complete collapse of neutral rights during conflict and to deal an even greater blow to international law, which has been weakened considerably during the past generation.

The visiting author pointed out the possibility that, from Scandinavia, the conflict might jump to the Balkans. An Allied campaign toward Rumania is not impossible, he said. It would have a two-fold purpose: To drive against Germany and to take control of Rumania's vitally important oil fields.

At the same time warfare near Turkey, if by land, would also be motivated by competition for oil. Although Germany generally is believed to hold sufficient stocks of essential raw materials for two years' fighting, the Polish campaign was a severe drain upon her oil resources, Dr. Emeny said.

TEMPTING TARGET

Consequently, Russian fields near Baku are vitally important. One major Soviet oil line, running to the Black Sea, is only 20 miles from the Turkish border—a tempting target.

The Allies' determination to tighten their blockade around Germany, which was a major factor in Scandinavian fighting, may lead to one or both of these measures to tap the Reich's oil sources. Furthermore, Dr. Emeny sees in the current hostilities the end of "watchful waiting" which characterized developments on the strongly-fortified western front during the winter. The outbreak of large-scale hostilities may mean eruptions along the entire potential battle line, from Scandinavia to the Near East.

The American observer believes Russia is reluctant now to begin another campaign, preferring to consolidate its own gains in the north, but any flareup in the Balkans or the Near East would draw the Soviets into action.

Although Germany appears to be better prepared now economically than in 1914, the current war is a "repetition of the old story—Germany attempting to break through an Allied ring for supplies."

The British and French empires give the Allies a great advantage in economic warfare, he opined. Simultaneously, the British fleet now boasts greater superiority over the German navy than in 1914. The Reich's army is, as usual, well organized and comparatively well trained, but he believes its high command is less capable than in the first World War because the demilitarization clauses of the Versailles treaty prevented adequate training for several years. Also, several of its most capable generals have been purged.

"A good officers' corps is the result of years of unbroken training," he pointed out. "For some time after the last peace, the training of German officers was interrupted, with an inevitable loss of efficiency."

Dr. Emeny is author of "The Strategy of Raw Materials," a thorough economic survey of the world's leading great Powers, and collaborated with the late Frank Simonds on "The Great Powers in World Politics," which now is widely used as a textbook on international affairs.

BRITISH CORRESPONDENT DESCRIBES OCCUPATION OF OSLO BY NAZIS

Domei Tsushin

LONDON, April 11—The first authentic eye-witness account of the Germans' entry into Oslo was telephoned to London today by Reuter's Oslo correspondent, who as a British subject narrowly managed to escape the vigilance of armed German guards before he crossed the frontiers into Sweden yesterday evening.

With crowds of people on the sidewalks, he watched a column of German troops, a thousand strong, march into the center of the city at 3 p.m. of April 9. Every man was armed with a rifle or a machinegun and carried uncovered bandoliers bulging with ammunition.

The inhabitants of the city seemed bewildered by the swift sequence of the incredible events. The city had capitulated an hour or so earlier after a night and morning of terror during which German planes incessantly bombed all military objectives in the neighborhood and machine-gunned districts around the harbor defenses. Already German troops had taken control of all military airdromes, including the Fornebo air port, just outside the city, where 50 Nazi planes were present. With these machines, the Nazis threatened to blow all the inhabitants out of the city if any signs of resistance were shown.

By noon the main station was packed with fleeing Norwegians, including women and children, carrying all the possessions they could gather together. Everyone seemed dazed and unable to understand what was going on.

The air was filled with the constant roar of warplane engines apparently intended to terrify the inhabitants.

During the afternoon when the correspondent was watching three bombers at a great height, a terrific explosion blew up a house a few hundred yards away from him. More bombs followed in quick succession. The watchers realized that counteraction had begun.

The feeling uppermost in the minds of the Norwegians of Oslo seemed to be one of incomprehension at the turn of events. And the question being asked everywhere was, "Why have the Allies allowed the Germans to do this?"

JAPANESE ENVOY IN SWEDEN REPORTS STOCKHOLM CALM, RATIONING BEGUN

Stockholm, the capital of Sweden, was calm as usual Wednesday despite the German lightning seizure of Oslo and Copenhagen the day before, it was learned when the Tokyo newspaper Asahi succeeded in obtaining a radiophone interview with Minoru Hirata, Japanese charge de'affaires in Sweden, at 5:27 p.m. Wednesday (Tokyo time).

Telephone communication between Japan and Northern Europe had been disrupted until that time since the war spread to Denmark and Norway Tuesday.

Asked by the Asahi if he had any new information on the Scandinavian war, Mr. Hirata replied that news filtering into Sweden was very meager, it being known in Stockholm only that the Nazis occupied Denmark and landed near Oslo.

"I talked by telephone with the Japanese Legation at Oslo at about 5 p.m. yesterday," Mr. Hirata said, "and learned that the people in Oslo were comparatively calm, though the Norwegian Government and Parliament were in tense excitement. There is no Japanese resident in the Norwegian capital.

"Here in Stockholm, things are quite as usual. The Cabinet held a meeting Tuesday but its result was not made public. The report that Nazi troops landed in Sweden is unfounded.

"Of course, Sweden will stick to her neutrality policy strictly and to the end, the people being an extremely peace-loving race, as was shown on the occasion of the Soviet-Finnish conflict. But, willy-nilly, she may eventually have to take sides. A portion of the people are mobilized already as a precautionary measure.

"Consumption of coffee and tea here was placed under Government control last month, and fuel for automobiles recently. Otherwise, there is no inconvenience in living.

"Because the winter, said to have been the coldest in the last 50 years, is over, materials will be shipped to these shores by the sea which is becoming free of ice.

"It is now 9:40 a.m. The weather is very fine and calm. It is almost unbelievable that large-scale warfare is going on in the neighboring countries."

ARMITAGE, BARBER ON N.Y.K. LINER, HAPPY

Charley Completes 300th Round Trip of Pacific

By STAFF CORRESPONDENT

YOKOHAMA, April 11—Charley Armitage, popular barber on the N.Y.K. liner Tatuta Maru, arrived here this morning full of good cheer. He had just completed his 300th round trip of the Pacific. For 30 years, he has sailed on Japanese steamships.

"Yes sir," said Charley, "I have carefully computed the miles I have sailed. To date it totals up to the astounding figure of 2,211,000 miles. And during my 30 years at sea, I have only missed four trips.

"To me, this is quite a record, and I am thinking seriously of sending it to 'Believe It Or Not' Ripley. He might be able to use it.

"What is in my mind more remarkable is the fact that the 2,211,000 miles have been spent on three ships: The Nippon Maru, Shinyo Maru and the Tatuta Maru. At present, I am the only foreigner on board the 168 ships that belongs to the Nippon Yusen Kaisya."

Among the celebrities that Charley has had in his barbershop are Prince Arthur of Connaught and the Crown Prince of Sweden. He also boasts of many other people who are well known in all circles of life throughout the world.

Charley has never married for the simple reason that he is never in one port long enough to meet a girl and propose to her. So today, he sails from port to port and spends his time with friends with shore jobs and homes.

Dairen to Invite Teams From Manila and Hawaii

The Kwantung Leased Territory Athletic Federation has decided to invite to Dairen the athletic teams from the Philippines and the Asahi baseball team from Hawaii that will compete in the Far Eastern Games in Tokyo and Osaka in June, according to Domei.

The decision to issue invitations forthwith was reached because of support to the Dairen program voted by the Japan Amateur Athletic Federation.

If the plans materialize, the teams will leave for Dairen after the conclusion of the games in the Kansai scheduled for June 16.

After the Dairen games, the teams will appear in various cities in Manchoukuo before departure for Hawaii by the Asahi team from Yokohama on June 28 and the Philippine teams in time to arrive at Shanghai by July 14.

U.S.-JAPAN SWIM MEET LIKELY THIS YEAR

Tryouts for Japan's swimming team to compete against an American contingent next summer either in Hawaii or in the United States proper, if present plans materialize, will be held at the Meiji Shrine pool on June 22 and 23, according to announcement of the swimming season schedule for this year by the Japan Swimming Federation.

The Hawaiian Swimming Association is understood to be working for the staging in Honolulu of a big swimming carnival in the summer with teams invited from the United States proper, Japan and probably Australia.

First event of note for the season is the annual Waseda University versus Keio dual meet at the Meiji Shrine pool on June 9. Next is the Nihon, Rikkyo and Meiji universities triangular meet on June 16 at the same pool. The first two mentioned have the bulk of the champions.

The annual national championships will be held on August 16, 17 and 18 at the Meiji Shrine pool.

The national intercollegiate championships are slated for September 14 and 15 at the Meiji Shrine pool.

Last event for the year will be Meiji Shrine Games championships at the Meiji Shrine pool tentatively scheduled on September 20, 21, 22 and 23.

BRITISH FINANCIAL WEAKNESS DENIED

Sterling Rate Fall Said Natural Result of Contro

Domei Tsushin

LONDON, April 9—Sir John Simon, Chancellor of the Exchequer, replying to questions in the House of Commons this afternoon, denied that the recent fall in the unofficial rate of the British sterling in foreign markets was a sign of British financial weakness or difficulties. He said that the drop was the natural result of recent regulations providing that the export of tin, rubber and certain other commodities must be paid for in foreign currencies or sterling obtained from authorized dealers.

The fall in quotation is the incidental result of tightening of exchange control. The drop is limited to a smallest proportion of sterling held abroad—namely, that held by such foreigners who are free to dispose it to another foreigner at the rate in current foreign markets.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer explained that the greater part of the sterling transactions is effected by the official rate. The proportion of transactions outside the official market is much smaller still, if allowance is made to the fact that a very great proportion of British purchases is conducted in sterling and franc-using areas and do not volve intervention of foreign currencies.

Dealing with the suggestion that Great Britain should block sterling assets belonging to foreigners, the Chancellor said that after a balanced review of all considerations involved, "We chose not to put an embargo upon foreign money or securities held by Great Britain, exposing ourselves to the risk that some foreign holders would use their freedom to dispose of their sterling assets. That has not happened to any substantial extent."

Concluding, he said, "The sterling is good to hold, and I believe this opinion is spreading to neutral countries."

Roosevelt Asks Congress To Authorize Reorganizations

Domei Tsushin

WASHINGTON, April 11—President Roosevelt asked Congress to authorize his third reorganization of federal administrative agencies which is expected to complete his shake-up of the civil departments which was started two years ago.

Twenty-one federal departments will be affected if President Roosevelt's new plans are approved by Congress.

The major changes include: firstly, the abolition of the Air Safety Board whose functions will be handled by the Civil Aeronautics Authority; secondly, the transfer of the Civil Aeronautics Authority into and independent board within the Department of Commerce; thirdly, the transfer of the Federal Drug Administration from the Department of Agriculture to the Federal Security Administration, and fourthly, the transfer of the Weather Bureau from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Commerce.

750 Participants Seen For Far Eastern Games In Tokyo Next June

Indications are that 750 athletes and officers will participate in the Far Eastern Games to be held in Tokyo early in June, which would be the greatest international sports event yet held in this country.

Including the 290 representatives from Japan proper, outside contingents are expected to be: Manchoukuo 210, China 100, Philippines 76, Thailand 2, Hawaii 18, and resident foreigners, 34.

War Dept. Approves Sale Of Planes to Allies

Domei Tsushin

WASHINGTON, April 11—Apparently prompted by developments in Scandinavia, the War Department today finally cleared the way for future large-scale deliveries of warplanes to Britain and France, when they approved the sale of three of the newest type fighting planes to the Allies. They are the Lockheed P-38, Bell P-39 and Curtiss P-40-D, all of which until the ban was lifted were considered to fall under the military protection law.

by fast transport ships and the troops could then have been armed on the spot.

INDIANS ARRESTED

AMSTERDAM, April 12—According to the London weekly "New Statesman and Nation," numerous arrests have been made among the members of the intellectual classes in British India. The paper asserts that the number of arrests is so great that the British authorities have been compelled to erect 12 new concentration camps for the prisoners. As a protest against these new oppressive measures, the students of the Calcutta college have declared a strike and abandoned their studies.

VIOLATE BELGIAN TERRITORY

BRUSSELS, April 12—British airmen once more violated Belgian neutrality this afternoon. While flying over Belgian territory, one of the British planes developed motor trouble and crashed near the village of Awans in the province of Liege. The machine was destroyed. Its two occupants were seriously injured and were taken to a hospital.

ALLIED PLANS REVEALED

OSLO, April 11—Several British documents were found and confiscated, according to a report received here today. These documents clearly proved that London and Paris in the near future meant to attack Norway.

According to the Transocean correspondent in Oslo, these documents were apparently overlooked when the British Minister hurriedly fled for the Norwegian capital early on April 8.

Ten maps were also discovered showing suitable landing places, naval bases and airfields for the British forces. Discovery of these documents is said to have aroused great indignation in the Norwegian capital.

It should be recalled in this connection that shortly before the laying of mines by the British in Norwegian territorial waters, many British consuls had been replaced by officers from the Army, Navy and Airforce. This it is believed was a first step toward the planned occupation of Norway by British forces.

Mystery Cleared Up

BERLIN, April 11—The mystery of the planned British attack on Norway has now been definitely cleared up, it was announced in official quarters here today. The British expeditionary troops were expected to occupy Bergen as well as other places.

For this purpose, these official quarters say that England, under pretense of giving aid to Finland, had sent five ships to Bergen carrying guns and machine-guns as well as ammunition. All that was necessary under these circumstances was the sending of troops by fast transports. The troops could then be armed on the spot.

German action, however, forestalled this planned British action by 10 hours. The attack by the German airforce nipped in the bud the British attempt to land troops at Bergen which nevertheless was made later. The entire cargo of the five British ships however have been seized by the Germans.

OSLO SCHOOLWORK CONTINUES

OSLO, April 11—Directors of all Norwegian schools were notified today that they were to keep the schools open unless the buildings were being used to quarter troops, it was announced here today.

BERGEN QUIET AGAIN

BERGEN, April 11—After receiving news that this town had been occupied by British and Norwegian troops, several Transocean correspondents arrived here today. One correspondent reported that the town was quiet and that he had been received by the German commander and immediately taken on an inspection tour of the city and surrounding countryside.

There was no trace anywhere of any British troop ships or British airplanes, the correspondent wrote. Furthermore, the inhabitants of the town said that there had been no military action of any kind in Bergen. Up to the time this report was written late this evening, absolute calm prevailed.

This afternoon, however, members of shipwrecked Norwegian fishing smacks which had struck floating mines arrived here. The fishermen stated that they had rowed all Wednesday for the Norwegian coast after their ships had sunk and during that time they had sighted a big British warship whose name they could not make out due to the distance.

However, they were able to see the British flag. This battleship, according to the fishermen was listing badly. Two British destroyers were standing by. They had tried to attract the attention of the destroyers but they were evidently too busy looking after the badly hit warship.

Petsamo Reoccupied

HELSINKI, April 11—News of the reoccupation of the Petsamo region by Finnish troops, according to the treaty with Moscow, was received here with great satisfaction. Contrary to certain foreign reports, no incidents of any sort occurred between the Finnish troops and the retiring Soviet forces.

DANUBE SAFEGUARDED

BERLIN, April 11—A full agreement has been reached between Germany and Rumania, that following the failure of the British to sabotage Danube shipping, everything possible must be done to safeguard the Danube from further acts of sabotage, it was announced here today by a spokesman of the Foreign Office during an interview with foreign correspondents.

The spokesman also denied reports saying that the German Government had sent notes to the Balkan States. Negotiations are now being carried out between the two Governments and the other Danubian countries to assure their full cooperation for protecting shipping on the Danube against sabotage.

MARINES TELL SECRETS

BERLIN, April 11—British marines who were rescued from a British warship off the Norwegian coast when questioned, confirmed the British Government's intention to violate Norwegian neutrality, it was learned here today by Transocean. The marines stated that they had been held in readiness since the beginning of April.

On leaving England, they received orders to protect British minefields. All prisoners, states Transocean, were surprised that the Germans had so swiftly forestalled the intended British action by taking possession of the very places which the British marines were supposed to occupy.

Warship Urakaze Launched

The launching ceremony of the new warship "Urakaze" was held at the Fujinagata Shipbuilding yard, Osaka, Wednesday, with Rear-Admiral Okubo, Chief of the Hanshin Navy Office, representing the Commander of the Kure Naval Station.

NO-HIT NO-RUN GAME HURLED BY ASANO

Katsusaburo Asano, 25-year-old pitcher of the Hankyu professional baseball team of Osaka, realized the lifetime ambition of every hurler Sunday afternoon at the Koshien stadium, near Osaka, when he chucked a no-hit no-run game against the Osaka Tigers. The final score was 9 to 0.

Asano's feat was the all more impressive as the Tigers are about the best hitting team in the circuit. Incidentally, it was the sixth no-hit no-run game registered in the league.

Good control of a slow curve that cut the outside corner held the Tigers completely at bay throughout the game.

The only Tigers player to reach first was Rightfielder Yamane on a base on balls after two outs in the third inning.

The Tigers used their best bet, Henry Wakabayashi, on the mound but the Hankyu players bombarded him with 11 hits in five innings for six runs to knock him out.

Behind the five-hit pitching of Lefty Shimizu, Nankai nosed out the Lions 2-1 in the other game.

The box score of the Hankyu-Tigers game follows:

China's 'Incident' Of Clocks Brings Curious Situation

Christian Science Monitor

SHANGHAI—Not all the conflict in China is military. A "time war" has broken out and continues to complicate daily living.

The China coast habitually orders its clocks in accordance with international time-zone practice, based on the position of the sun and not on politics.

But after Japan's Army had arrived and got at least part of the situation more or less in hand, "Tokyo time" was imported. Sentries on the western boundaries of the International Settlement, for example, and even on the Garden and other bridges which they held within the Settlement, operated an hour off the rest of Shanghai. If they announced that passage past such a point was to halt at 7 p.m., for example, the general public soon discovered that the actual meaning was 6 p.m. by the time the rest of the city observed.

"Tokyo time" was even carried far west along the Yangtze to such points as Hankow.

But now the National Government is reported to have turned the tables by proclaiming that during the period that hostilities continue, the time recorded in Chungking should be considered by all patriotic Chinese as standard throughout China. And Chungking is an hour off China coast time but in the opposite direction. In other words, Shanghai's 6 p.m. is Chungking's 5 p.m.!

Thus, any individual along the China coast may be torn among three different settings of his wristwatch, providing he has one. If he is a foreign "old China hand" he'll want the standard time. If he is a Japanese he may follow the Army view and use Tokyo time an hour later. If he is a Chinese acquainted and sympathetic with the ideas of his Government he may use Chungking time two hours different from and earlier than Tokyo time.

But to a great many people in China, time means very little anyway.

Warmerdam Clears 15 Feet in Pole Vault For New World's Mark

Domei Tsushin

BERKLEY, California, April 13—Cornelius Warmerdam, of the San Francisco Olympic Club, today broke a three-year-standing world record in the pole vault with a leap of 15 feet at a triangular meet here of the Olympic Club, Washington State College and the University of California.

The bar was later raised to 15 feet 3 inches, but Warmerdam failed to clear it in his three attempts. The former world record of 14 feet 11 inches, made in 1937, was held jointly by William Sefton and Earle Meadows.

PORT OF KOBE SHOWS EXPORT GAIN IN APRIL

Sharp Increases Noted By Wheat, Lumber and Sundries To Yen Bloc Countries

By SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

KOBE, April 12—Both exports and imports for the port of Kobe during the first 10-day period of April show a surprising upward trend. Exports aggregated ¥46,460,000 and imports ¥33,724,000, an increase of ¥4,713,000 and ¥587,000 respectively, as compared with the previous 10-day period. The figures leave an export surplus of ¥2,736,000.

In exports, the sharp increases shown by wheat, lumber and sundries to the yen bloc countries form a sharp contrast with the little less than ¥1,000,000 drop of cotton textiles, though this appears more or less in keeping with the general trend. In imports, beans, raw rubber, wool and pulp show acute drops ranging between ¥500,000 and ¥2,000,000, but the apparent favorable trend is offset with a huge climb of ¥11,000,000 in raw cotton.

Imports and exports for the port of Kobe during the first 10-day period of April are as follows: (in 1,000 yen units)

IMPORTS	1st 10 days of April	Compared with last 10 days, March
Beans	790	708
Raw rubber	524	1,930
Raw cotton	19,542	10,872
Hemp	956	485
Wool	182	956
Pulp	528	608
Coal	834	436
Machinery	1,574	482
Oil	368	219
Miscellaneous	8,050	6,089
EXPORTS
Flour	478	406
Sea weed	875	301
Cotton yarn	488	160
Silk yarn	3,168	108
Rayon yarn	878	347
Cotton textiles	5,384	846
Silk textiles	610	225
Woolen textiles	1,108	462
Hosiery	799	30
Paper	905	528
Machinery	963	379
Lumber	1,430	1,062
Miscellaneous	13,123	1,162

Foreign trade figures for the port of Kobe during the period from January of the current year to the present were announced here today as being: exports aggregated ¥288,570,000 and imports ¥285,798,000, an increase of ¥85,465,000 and ¥101,223,000 respectively over the corresponding period of the previous year. The total is ¥574,368,000, an increase of ¥186,688 over the corresponding period of the previous year. There was a favorable balance of ¥2,772,000.

Harvard Names Lamb Graduate School Dean

N.Y. Times

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—Arthur B. Lamb, Professor of Chemistry at Harvard University and director of the chemical laboratory, has been appointed dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences. Dr. Lamb was graduated at Tufts in 1900 and later studied at Harvard, Leipzig and Heidelberg.

He has been a member of the Department of Chemistry at Harvard since 1905 with the exception of the years 1906-12, when he taught at New York University. He has been director of the chemical laboratory at Harvard since 1912.

SMALL FACTORIES ENJOY NO BOOM; OWNERS RAPIDLY UNLOADING PLANTS

Contrary to popular belief that small factory owners are enjoying unprecedented prosperity because of the wartime boom, proprietors are unloading their establishments as rapidly as possible for various reasons, reports the Hochi.

The trend is especially noticeable in Kamata ward, center of wartime industries in Tokyo, where at least one factory a day changes hands, the journal asserts.

A factory owner summed up his side of the question with:

"It is untrue we small factory owners are enjoying unprecedented prosperity. Once orders used to come to us, but now they all go to the large concerns. We seldom get large orders directly, but have to be content with piece work from the larger factories unable to care for their immense volume of orders. So factory ownership transfers are unavoidable."

Another interpretation, however, was put to the phenomena by Dr. Teizo Inouye, president of the Commerce and Industry Encouragement Hall under management of Tokyo Prefecture.

"The most important factor, I believe," said Dr. Inouye, "is a psychological one. Owners of small factories are more sensitive to changes in international affairs and they are of the opinion that conflict on the Asiatic mainland is nearly ended. The new National Government of China has been established and they think the wartime manufacturing boom will soon end. Therefore they are disposing of their factories as rapidly as possible.

"Under the circumstances it is necessary to guide those who have disposed of their factories into other lines of industry, notably manufacturing articles for peace time consumption. Some concrete plan to cope with the situation should be worked out between the Government and the people."

JAPANESE BIRTH RATE DECLINING; INFANT MORTALITY RATE RISES

Japan's birth rate has declined markedly since outbreak of the China Affair. The number of births in large towns is far below that in rural regions. Figures are revealed by official birth rate returns for 1938 gathered by the Sanitary Affairs Bureau of the Welfare Ministry, reports the Chugai Shogyo.

The total number of births in 1938, according to statistics quoted by the journal, were 1,928,321, as compared to the 2,180,734 for 1937, year in which Sino-Japanese hostilities began.

Regarding infant deaths of sucklings, an acute question of late, the situation has not been improved much when the death figure 220,695 for 1938 are compared to the 230,701 for the preceding year. The infant death rate compared to births was 11.4 per cent in 1938 as against 10.6 per cent in 1937, which shows the rate is gradually increasing.

Of the total births in 1938, those seen in towns totaled 567,819 as compared to 1,360,502 in rural districts. However, it is in the farming villages where the deaths of sucklings are remarkably high as compared to deaths in towns. Cities had 41,174 such deaths and rural villages had 179,521.

Locally viewed, the births are highest in Tokyo prefecture, which had approximately 157,000 births in 1938, followed by Osaka prefecture with approximately 95,000.

This, however, is due to the large populations of large towns. If the birth rate is computed as against every 1,000 persons, the results are most prominent among the prefectures in northeastern Japan, Tokyo and Osaka being placed at the bottom of the list.

Against every 1,000 persons, Aomori prefecture had 36 births, ranking first of all prefectures, followed by Iwate prefecture with 35, Akita with 35, Hokkaido with 33, Miyagi with 31, Yamagata with 31, Fukushima with 31 and Niigata with 31. Among all the other prefectures there are none which had more than 31 births against every 1,000 of their populations.

Tokyo prefecture, on the other hand, had only 22 births against every 1,000 inhabitants, Osaka, still fewer, had 19, Kyoto 20, Hyogo 22 and Aichi 26.

When the rate of suckling deaths are shown in percentage to the existing inhabitants, Aomori prefecture, which had most births, also had highest infant mortality rate with 15 per cent, closely followed by Iwate with 14 and Akita with 13, while Tokyo and Osaka were lowest with 8 and 10 per cent, respectively. This is a good testimony, said the Chugai Shogyo, that sanitary and obstetrical equipment is better in large towns than in the country.

Duke Leopold of Saxe-Cobourg And Gotha Leaves for Japan

Domei Tsushin

SAN FRANCISCO, April 11—Acting as personal emissary of Chancellor Adolf Hitler, Duke Leopold of Saxe-Cobourg and Gotha left here today for Japan aboard the N.Y.K. liner Kamakura Maru on a mission to extend formal congratulations to Japanese authorities on the 2,600th anniversary of the founding of the Japanese Empire.

Duke Leopold arrived in the United States last February by way of Japan to sound out America's reaction to European peace moves. He was appointed Chancellor Hitler's personal representative to Japan last month.

NEW JERSEY SEES FINISH OF DEPRESSION

Industries from Other States Among Factors Bringing Rise During 1939 Over Peak of 1930

By RUSSELL B. PORTER

N.Y. Times

TRENTON, N.J.—The establishment of new industries, some from New York, in this State in the last few years has been an important factor, together with the war boom and the general business upturn, in bringing industrial New Jersey back to pre-depression levels in employment and payrolls.

The number of industries in the State, the number of industrial employes, and the amount of industrial payrolls in 1939 all exceeded the previous peak figures in 1930, according to a survey made by the New Jersey State Chamber of Commerce.

Following are the comparative figures:

Number of companies—1939, 9,850; 1930, 8,385; gain, 1,465.

Number of employes—1939, 504,250; 1930, 490,100; gain, 14,150.

Payrolls—1939, $707,967,000; 1930, $707,070,000; gain, $897,000.

60 PER CENT EMPLOYMENT GAIN

At the depth of the depression, in 1933, the State was down to 295,600 industrial employes, so that 1939 figures indicate an increase of more than 60 per cent in employment from the bottom.

The Chamber of Commerce figures cover both manufacturing and service industries.

Since the Chamber of Commerce and allied organizations began their drive to attract new industry, the records of the State Department of Labor show that 5,582 new manufacturing concerns giving employment to 84,909 persons located in New Jersey in the four years 1936 to 1939 inclusive. Making allowance for the industries that discontinue business each year, the 1939 figures represent a large net gain and indicate, according to Robert T. Bowman, president of the chamber, that industrial recovery in New Jersey is progressing faster than in other industrial States.

Second only to the stimulus from the general recovery movement, Mr. Bowman placed the location of new plants in New Jersey as a reason for its rapid progress.

George H. Mettam, chairman of the chamber's industrial development committee, reported that major industries that have located in New Jersey employ 90 per cent New Jersey residents and bring in 10 per cent special technicians and supervisors from outside the State.

An analysis of new industries that located in New Jersey last year, Mr. Mettam said, showed that 42 per cent of their total employment was derived from establishment of manufacturing branch plants in the State, 34 per cent from entirely new enterprises, and 24 per cent from out-of-State manufacturers relocating their entire operations in New Jersey.

AMONG THE NEW PLANTS

In addition to the New York City companies listed in yesterday's dispatch as moving to New Jersey last year, large plants established in the State recently were:

General Foods Corporation, coffee, Hoboken; Hills Bothers, coffee, Edgewater; Ternstedt division, General Motors, interior hardware for cars, Trenton; Andrew Jergens, pharmaceutical manufacturers, Belleville; American Can Company, Hoboken; Staso Milling Company, Bridgewater Township; Annheuser Busch Company, yeast, Kearny; Allen Industries, Inc., upholstery, Linden, Ortho Products Company, manufacturing druggists, Linden, and Sanitary Products Company, Plainfield.

With its new plants at Trenton and Linden, General Motors now has six plants in New Jersey.

The friendly attitude of Governor A. Harry Moore, the New Jersey Legislature and municipal authorities in most parts of the State toward industry was cited by Chamber of Commerce spokesmen, together with the State's freedom from a State corporate or personal income tax and from serious labor troubles, as among the principal reasons for the movement of industries to New Jersey from other States.

Mr. Bowman emphasized that the drive to attract new industry had not been done at the expense of labor. He said the average weekly wage paid to industrial workers in the State was higher in 1939 than at any time since 1930, and was above the average paid in the nation as a whole.

AVERAGE WAGE CALLED HIGHER

For the quarter ended June last, he continued, the average wage was $26.42, against a national average of $26.39 on the basis of reports of the State Department of Labor and the National Industrial Conference Board. The June, 1939, figure for New Jersey, he added, was only a little less than the "boom" peak of $28.97 in December, 1928, but actually was worth more in purchasing power than the 1928 wage. The bottom average in the State was $16.56 in March, 1933, so that the 1939 figure represents an increase of 35 per cent.

It was said at the State Department of Labor that the average had increased to $27.39 in December, 1939, after the Chamber of Commerce survey. The average hourly earnings for all manufacturing industries in the State were 70.38 cents, and the average number of hours worked a week was 39.29 last December, according to the Labor Department. Factory employment increased 9 per cent in 1939 over 1938, average weekly earnings 6.42 per cent, and total payrolls 16.2 per cent.

Department of Labor figures also showed that industrial construction in the State increased from $3,553,061 in 1938 to $8,389,257 in 1939, and new dwelling units increased from 5,864 to 12,333. Both these gains were attributed to the new factory and dwelling space required by industry.

Labor Commissioner John J. Toohey Jr. said New Jersey had been paying five cents an hour more than the minimums established by the Federal wages and hours law, and had been enforcing its own State minimum wage law for women and children, passed in 1933 but not enforced until 1937.

Codes have been applied to the light manufacturing, laundry, cleaning and dyeing industries, and are about to be applied to the clothing and allied industries, with a minimum of thirty-five cents an hour and time-and one-half for overtime. In the clothing industry, the minimum will increase to forty-two cents in 1943, and overtime will begin after forty hours next October.

Commissioner Toohey said that if it wasn't for these laws "hundreds of sweatshops" would join the influx of legitimate industry to New Jersey, but that sweatshops which previously existed had been "pretty well eliminated" in the last two or three years.

"Some have left the State since we began enforcing the law, but we're glad to get rid of that type of industry," he said.

Public officials and industrialists agreed that an important factor on the peaceful labor relations that have attracted new industry to New Jersey has been the official discouragement of communism and other radicalism in labor organizations by State and municipal authorities.

C.I.O. AND HAGUE MAKE PEACE

Since the C.I.O. defeat of Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City in the United States Supreme Court over the issue of civil liberties for C.I.O. organizers, and the Mayor's attack on Communist influence in the C.I.O. during that case, the C.I.O. and the Mayor, who controls the Democratic administration in Jersey City, Hudson County and New Jersey, have made peace, and are now getting along on friendly terms. For some time past both the A.F. of L. and C.I.O. leaders in the State have been cooperating with public officials and industrialists to advance the drive for new industry.

Along with the upturn in industry and production, the relief load in New Jersey has decreased. For the last eighteen months there has been a decrease in unemployment figures every month except for one month at the time WPA rolls throughout the country were cut drastically. The total cost of relief to the State, local and county Governments in 1939 was $19,000,000, compared to $22,000,000 in 1938. The 1940 cost is estimated at $12,000,000, according to the State administration.

Local relief rolls have been cut from a peak of 294,730 persons in March, 1938, to 167,089 in December, 1939. Whereas, one out of every eighteen persons in New Jersey was on relief in 1937 and one out of every seventeen in 1938, only one out of every twenty-four was on relief in 1939. In New York one out of every thirteen was on relief in 1939, according to Rufus C. Maddux, managing director of the New Jersey Council, on the basis of reports of the Federal Social Security Board and the New Jersey Financial Assistance Board.

WPA rolls also have shown a decrease, with 73,180 employed on March, 1939, to 167,089 in December, 1939, compared to 100,474 in December, 1938, according to a report made by the New Jersey Council to Governor Moore. However, the number of persons registered as looking for jobs with the State Employment Service was 276,246 on December 31, 1939, compared to 234,126 on the same date in 1938.

3 Ten Round Bouts On Card Wednesday

Three ten-round events are expected to draw the fans to a smoker to be staged Wednesday night at the Korakuen stadium by the Fuji and Teikoku Boxing clubs.

Tsuneo (Piston) Horiguchi, Japan's No. 1 featherweight, meets Taro Aizawa of the Kansai, and is favored to win.

Umio Gen, who defeated Horiguchi last year but was outpointed by him this year, will take on Takeshi Kaido, and it is expected to be a good bout.

Joe Eagle, of the Philippines, who is out to redeem himself from his miserable defeat to Horiguchi in February, will mix gloves with Toshiro Aoki of the Fuji Boxing Club. If he is in any kind of condition, Eagle should win by virtue of his greater experience.

There will be an eight rounder and five four rounders on the card as well. The first bout is slated to start at 6 p.m.

'Big Six' Combine Wins by 4-1 Score

A combined team of the Tokyo Six University Baseball league clubs defeated a combine of the Tokyo Collegiate league by a 4 to 1 score Tuesday afternoon at the Meiji Shrine stadium.

The game was part of a special program in memory of Shishu Ota, oldest sports writer, who died recently at Kamakura.

The winners clinched the game in the first inning when they knocked out Pitcher Kojima. Miyazaki, Asai and Murakami hit the ball hard to drive in three runs.

Sugase, who replaced Kojima, pitched a nice game, holding the "Big Six" combine to five scattered hits and one run in the remaining eight innings.

Saigo of Rikkyo, Takagi of Keio and Fujimoto of Meiji worked three innings each on the mound for the "Big Six" team.

U.S.S.R. and Lithuania Complete New Frontier

Domei Tsushin

MOSCOW, April 14—The virtual completion of new frontier between the Soviet Union and Lithuania, necessitated by the hostilities in Poland, was officially announced here today.

The announcement said the central mixed frontier commission composed of Soviet and Lithuanian delegates concluded its field work for the demarcation of a new state border between the two countries, in March, 1940. The new border covers a length of 370 kilometers. In all, to indicate the frontier, 609 markers have been erected, in addition to 1,218 posts for the same purpose.

The announcement stated that the task of topographically surveying the new frontier also has been practically concluded.

was shot down, and one member of its crew was rescued and taken to hospital. Another German plane also came down on the west coast, and its crew were interned.

Stavanger Bombed

LONDON, April 15—The Air Ministry last night announced that operations and reconnaissance flights by aircraft of the Royal Air Force over the North Sea and the Norwegian coast have continued during the last 24 hours.

Early yesterday Stavanger airdrome was again the target of low flying attack by our aircraft. Salvoes of bombs were dropped and a hangar, a runway and a number of enemy aircraft were damaged. Anti-aircraft fire was encountered but our aircraft continued and delivered a further attack against the enemy at Hafsfjord, where a number of seaplanes moored on the water were machinegunned and an enemy machine-gun post was put out of action.

SCHEER TORPEDOED

LONDON, April 15—Yesterday's Admiralty communique gave an indication of the highly successful work, under extremely hazardous conditions, of British submarines during the past week, when it was revealed that the submarine Spearfish attacked the German pocket battleship Admiral Scheer early on Thursday morning. The Admiral Scheer was probably hit by more than one torpedo. She was the sister ship of the Graf Spee and the River Plate battle showed that it was impossible for ships with armament of her size to carry heavy protective plating, so that if she is still afloat naval observers think it unlikely that she will be of much use for some months.

It was also revealed that the submarine Truant torpedoed and sank on Tuesday last a German cruiser believed to be the Karlsruhe, the sinking of which has already been announced and has been admitted by the Germans.

Several more successes have also been scored in the Skagerrak and Kattegat in the past week, according to the Admiralty statement. Excluding the German steamer Rauenfels 8,460 tons, and the six other supply ships sunk off Narvik by the Second Destroyer Flotilla on Wednesday, 14 supply ships are reported torpedoed, of which 10 are known to have been sunk.

These are the tanker Poseidonia, 3,911 tons, the AugustLeonhard 5,261 tons, all sunk on Monday; the Ionia 3,102 tons, the new troopship Antares, 2,593 tons, the Moonsund, 321 tons, and an unknown German ship of 4,000 tons. On Wednesday two more unknown German ships were hit by torpedoes but it is not yet known whether they were sunk.

In addition, the German steamer Alster, 8,541 tons, and three trawlers have been captured; the tanker Skagerrak, 6,044 tons, and the Main, 7,624 tons, have been scuttled; and the tanker Kattegat, 6,031 tons, has been sunk by the Norwegians in the Skagerrak.

Played Up in U.S.

NEW YORK, April 15—The destruction of the German destroyers at Narvik provides the chief war story in all the New York papers today. The New York Times says, "The warring nations are not alone in believing that their existence depends on the outcome of the war. Every neutral nation, no matter how far from Europe or how determined to stay out of this war, must reassess its position in the light of the result of the German drive. Germany has now shown that she will not hesitate to crush any neutral in her path if she feels that she thereby gains a strategic advantage."

"The war is coming closer to us every day," writes the "Herald Tribune." The fate of Greenland brings the war to our very doors. If Holland is invaded, the fate of Curacao and the Dutch West Indies would bring the war within a stone's throw of the key of our defence of Panama.

"Today, as in 1917," the paper continued, "people dread the thought of war, but today, even more than in 1917, war threatens American interests. The only thing that can check it is an overwhelming victory for the allies and the defeat of Germany. The United States must obviously face the possibility that it may find itself forced to join the fray as the only way in which to protect its own interests."

U.S. NEGROES FARE WELL IN NORTH CAROLINA

Impressions of Southern State Seen Interesting By Rambling Reporter

By R. H. MARKHAM

Christian Science Monitor

FAYETTEVILLE, N. C.—Fayetteville is an old Scotch town. It has distinctive features, as has Salem, an old German colony, Waldese a French colony, and New Bern a Swiss colony. But what most impressed me here was the contrast between the Slave Market and the State Normal School for Negroes. They constitute very dramatic evidence of 80 years of progress.

Fayetteville is a well planned city with wide, carefully charted streets running at right angles to each other. In the exact center of town, where four streets meet, is a picturesque, two-storied market, with a belfry and a clock that has run for 102 years. One of the types of merchandise that used to be sold in this market was slaves. That took place as recently as 78 years ago.

That very clock struck ten in the morning, the merchant presented his human wares, the buyers bid. The auctioneer cried, "Going one, Going two, Gone," and a slave was sold. Now in this same town is a splendid college where the grandchildren of those slaves are provided a good education by the State of North Carolina. This school, let it be repeated, is maintained, not by distant philanthropists, but by North Carolina taxpayers of both races.

EACH HAS ITS WAYS

The races are segregated, and I shall not attempt to say whether that is good or bad. In busses the Negroes must take the back seats, which are not the best. In the railroads their car has been of exactly the same kind as mine, so far as I have observed. In schools segregation makes it possible for educated Negroes, both to find jobs and to serve their people. In North Carolina there are about 7,000 Negro teachers. If schools were mixed, there wouldn't be a thousand. So, along with drawbacks, segregation has advantages.

One of the best, if not the best report on Negro education in North Carolina is made by a Committee of North Carolinians for the State Legislature. It shows, among other things, that there is a Negro high school in Wake Forest. I visited that school and saw the excellent work being done by graduates of the Fayetteville Teachers Training College. It was there, indeed, I learned about Fayetteville.

DURHAM AND SHAW UNIVERSITIES

The Wake Forest Negro High and Elementary School has two excellent buildings. It is conducted by a superintendent, assisted by 15 teachers. The school was very clean, the discipline was above reproach, the atmosphere was friendly and inspiring. Any Department of Education would deserve commendation for such pedagogical excellence. The success was encouraging, though far from as good as in Horace Mann School, New York City. The pupils are very poor, have little home encouragement and some were plainly hungry. It is a noble enterprise carried on against heavy odds. Most of the children were brought to the school in busses.

Another state Negro school which I visited was the College at Durham. It has good new buildings, a fairly good equipment, an efficient management, an efficient management.

An old, distinguished private Negro institution of higher learning is Shaw University at Raleigh. Indications of its success are the posts held by its graduates, among whom have been "a United States Minister to Liberia, consuls to Africa and South America, a founder of a Negro insurance company, a municipal court judge in Washington, 10 college presidents, 25 deans, professors and college instructors, 100 elementary and secondary school principals, 42 high school principals in North Carolina, a lecturer in New York City College, 500 physicians, 10 missionaries, and 30 teachers of home economics." This is a notable record of service.

Negro progress is also written in houses, fields and business enterprises. As one goes out Fayetteville Street toward the Negro college in Durham he sees a prosperous-appearing Negro community. They have "business firms, insurance company, newspapers, a library, and a hospital. In 1887, Negroes there owned two city lots and 1,366 acres in the country. In 1935 their city holdings amounted to $4,000,000, their business assets were worth $7,000,000. The North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company, a Negro establishment, operates in eight states and employes 1,067 persons."

Of course, this is only one side of the picture, but it is a side never to lose sight of.

FIVE NEGRO COLLEGES

North Carolina maintains five institutions of college rank for its Negro citizens. In 1923 they enrolled 109 students, now more than 2,500. Counting summer school and extension courses 9,000 are enrolled. Private Negro colleges, eight in number, bring the total regular enrollment up to nearly 4,500 and the grand total of all up to 13,000. The number of qualified Negro teachers, graduating from North Carolina colleges or normal schools in 1938 was 500.

The number of Negro high school students has increased from 3,477 in 1923 to 33,242 in 1938.

The qualifications of Negro teachers has also improved with great rapidity. The index in 1923 was 380, which means that the average training of Negro teachers was slightly less than the high school course. In 1939 it was 734, which means the average was three and a third years' college training. The Negro teachers in North Carolina are almost as well trained as the white. The respective indices are 734 and 780.

Within 15 years the Negro teachers have improved their standing by 353 points; the white, by 246. Ninety per cent of the Negro teachers now have a college education. In the city of Greensboro the Negro teachers have a better standard of qualifications than the white. This index is 800 or perfect, each teacher being a college graduate; the white index is 798.2.

MANY NEGRO COLLEGES

In 1937 there were 2,223 elementary Negro schools. The course of study and length of term were the same as in white schools. The attendance was 90 per cent of the enrolment. Six thousand teachers served the elementary schools.

In addition, there are 209 Negro high schools with an enrolment of 31,522 students or 12 per cent of the Negro high school population.

As far as the mere number of schools goes the situation is fairly good. Most Negro children in elementary schools, nine-tenths of those enrolled attend and they are taught by well-prepared teachers.

However, the housing and equipment of the elementary schools are usually defective, very few are consolidated, the number of busses serving Negro children is small, and the facilities for Negro high school education are very meager. The salaries of Negro teachers, also, are much smaller than those of white teachers, though their work is decidedly harder.

This official report says:

"Conditions in our rural Negro schools are extremely distressing. There is a lack of consolidation, transportation, good buildings, and high schools." Many of the one-teacher rural school buildings "are a menace to health and dangerous to life and limb."

There is still very much to be done and a rapidly growing multitude of unemployed Negro intellectuals may carry on an agitation, destined to increase the strain. The stream of progress is never free from cataracts, but so far that stream in North Carolina has surmounted a large number of them and continues steadily to advance.

2 Australian Table Tennis Champs Coming

Domei Tsushin

SYDNEY, April 16—Australian Table Tennis Champions, Ananson and Bowe, who were invited by the Japanese Table Tennis Association to participate in international tournaments here in May and June, will leave for Japan on May 2, aboard the Japanese liner Atuta Maru.

Asahi Team Arrives For Games, May 21

First of the outside teams to arrive for the Far Eastern Games early in June in Tokyo will be the Asahi baseball team of Hawaii, which is scheduled to reach Yokohama on May 21. Twenty will come in the party. Players are all American citizens of Japanese parentage.

The Philippine delegation, consisting of 76 members, will arrive at Kobe on May 29, the Manchurian delegation of 208 members, at Kobe on May 31, while the team from China of 125 members will leave Shanghai on May 24.

Two tennis players from Thailand may compete.

FINNS DENY AID

HELSINKI, April 16—Reports by the English broadcast to the effect that large numbers of Finnish volunteers departed for Norway and that the Finnish Government had sent an address of sympathy to Norway are characterized by the Finnish news agency as entirely without foundation.

French Nervous

GENEVA, April 16—The French press is fully confirming the nervousness of official French quarters apropos Italy's stand and is imploring the Italians to change their attitude toward France and England. The Grenoble paper Petit Dauphinois for instance in a several columns survey of the situation which is featured by many gaps made by the censor's pencil emphasizes that the French Chamber of Deputies is filled with "unparalleled nervousness."

L'Intransigeant stresses no less than four times that France and England are not planning an attack on Italy. "It is so difficult to imagine," says the paper "that the French and Italians must consider themselves enemies." Le Temps opines that it is of "great moral importance" that the Italian press again is emphasizing the German supremacy.

ITALY BACKS NAZIS

ROME, April 16—The strengthening of the German positions in Norway and the failure of the Anglo-French attacks are the main topic of newspaper comments in the Italian capital today. The papers emphasize that the first stage of the big duel proved the superiority of Germany. They stress at the same time the serious losses of the English and the capture of considerable quantities of war material by the German troops. The fanciful propaganda of the Democratic press is contrasted by the Tribuna to the strategical realities. The paper emphasizes that the Western Powers were not only unable to prevent the German troops from landing in Norway or cut off the connection between the landing corps and the home supports but that they had failed in gaining a firm footing on the Norwegian coast. The German troops were about to break the final resistance of the Norwegians who from a great distance were being incited by the British and French. The latter did not want to let an opportunity pass of enlisting others for risking their skins for the Allies.

Lancashire Dead

AMSTERDAM, April 16—The cotton industry of Lancashire is almost idle, says the Financial News. Hardly one order has come in during the last three weeks, according to the London paper, since the British price control has not yet fixed the price for cotton. The Daily Worker says that 80,000 spinners have informed their employers that they would lay down their tools within a month unless the wages are increased to tally with the costs of living.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - by Ripley

U.S. Ornithologists Put on Alert by Finds Of Queer Forest Bird

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON—The new species of bird discovered by Karl W. Haller, ornithologist at Bethany College, W. Va., has been tentatively named "Sutton's Warbler" in honor of Dr. George Sutton of Cornell University. Whether or not this name will stick depends upon whether or not other birds like it can be found.

Dr. Haller, when on a walk in the woods of West Virginia, 12 miles south of Martinsburg one day, thought he was listening to the song of a Parula warbler. There was a "rapid buzzing trill, ascending the scale and dropping off at the end, given twice in succession without a break," he says. Moving closer up, he found that, in appearance the bird had more the characteristics of the yellow throated warbler, though there were strange rectangular black markings on the sides of the face, and on the back a triangular yellowish patch. Continuing his search, Dr. Haller found a female bird some 18 miles away that closely resembled the male in color and marking.

The nation's expert ornithologists, though they have nothing like the new bird in their collections, are slow to believe that Dr. Haller has discovered a new bird species, rather than a hybrid. Dr. Herbert Friedmann, curator of birds at the Smithsonian Institution here, is "reserving judgment."

The only new birds discovered in the United States in the twentieth century have been found in out-of-the-way places, previously unexplored. Latest find was the Cape Sable Sea Sparrow, inhabiting swamps on the southern tip of Florida. That was 20 years ago. It seems strange, Dr. Friedmann says, that some student of birds should not have seen the "Sutton warbler" in the thick-inhabited East before this.

Dr. Haller suggests that perhaps the birds have gone unnoticed in recent years "because of the similarity of their song with that of the Parula warbler." He is quite confident that additional specimens of his warbler will be found, and that his claim will be fully established in the world of ornithology.

Moslem Woman

dresses meetings from public platforms. She has also taken to piloting airplanes. In short she is entering every field of activity, and is proving a useful member of modern society."

QUESTIONS FOLLOW

In the question period which followed the reading of the paper Mr. Berlas answered many questions regarding the marriage customs and divorce among Moslem women. He stated that in marriage the final word rested with the girl herself. He also stated that the main difference between Moslem women and other women of India is that though she is more secluded, her religion gives her more freedom. Widows can and do marry again.

Men, according to Moslem regulations are allowed up to four wives but each must be treated equally and the children of all wives have equal rights. The women are not forced to live in the same house, though sometimes they do.

Professor Berlas stated that though only about two or three per cent of the women in cities are coming out from behind purdah, this percentage is steadily increasing.

Following the lecture tea was served in the room downstairs, the hostesses being Mrs. J. T. Henderson, Mrs. R. J. Blake, Mrs D.M. Forsyth and Mrs. Y. Miyazaki.

EARLY JAPANESE EARTHENWARE RIVALS AMERICAN INDIAN PIECES

With possible exception of early American Indian pottery, earthenware fashioned during Japan's stone age is the most beautiful in the world, thinks the Rev. Gerard Grott, Dutch missionary and archeologist here.

Rev. Grott, who speaks fluent Japanese, told a representative of the Chugai Shogyo that he intends to donate his valuable archeological collection, made during the past eight years in Japan, to the Tokyo museum.

The missionary-scientist once was on the Jochi University teaching staff but during the past year has been doing extensive excavating work in shell mounds of Niigata, Aichi, Tokyo and Chiba prefectures, adding approximately 1,000 pieces to his collection.

Last February he made valuable finds near the Ubayama shell mound at Ichikawa City, Chiba prefecture, where seven years ago Prince Kashiwa Ohyama, one of Japan's most celebrated archeologists, took the visiting Crown Prince of Spain, Rev. Grott found shell-ware, earthernware, bone ware, an earthen sinker for a fish line and a shell arm ring in the mound. He is classifying his collection at the Albert home in Nishi-Ogikubo, Suginami ward, Tokyo.

ICELAND ONE OF SMALLEST, MOST REMOTE DEMOCRACIES

There Are No Very Rich and No Very Poor People: Women Among First to Get Franchise

By ELIZABETH YATES

Christian Science Monitor

One of the smallest and most remote democracies is Iceland. Though opinion varies as to what Iceland is noted for—some say fish, others weather—a few realize that Iceland has evolved in its own way, and for its own use, an admirable form of democratic Government.

Three or four days' voyage on a small Icelandic ship will cover the distance from Britain or the Continent to this Arctic island. Iceland tells its story even from afar as rugged mountains streaked with snow rise upon the horizon. Drawing nearer, appear desert wastes from which hot springs send up intermittent surges of water, the steam dissolving slowly against the sky.

ROCK EVERYWHERE

There is rock everywhere, volcanic rock a play of fantastic colors in the unchanging midsummer light. Tiny clusters of house are set down in green fields where the lava flow spared areas of fertility. Piles of fish stand ready to be laid out to cure in the sun. White dots on the hillside are the long-wooled sheep going forth to feed. Then, across the bay, Rekjavik appears—the chief city of Iceland, of no great size but of considerable importance. A modern city, it rises in beauty, order, and activity out of the rock around it, representative of a land that has made for itself an honorable way of living.

In the ninth century, the growing despotism sweeping over Europe after the age of Charlemagne precipitated the settlement of Iceland. The northern races had always been liberty-loving, and when King Harold of Norway's rule became too autocratic, many of his chieftains took their families and livestock, household possessions, and retainers, and sailed in their open boats west to establish themselves in a land where they might be their own masters.

Reaching Iceland, they found there only a handful of Celts, who had come across the sea from Ireland a half century previously, seeking seclusion and religious freedom. The Celts did not remain long on the same land as the lusty, idolatrous Vikings, but something of their influence did. From 874 to 930 colonists flowed to Iceland, all of them well-born chieftains with wealth and personal power. The island soon had a population as numerous as that of today. It became clear that some centralized form of Government was needed, and in the year 930 the first parliament of the world met in the plains of Thingvellir.

The idea was better glimpsed than fully understood, for the proud chieftains had as yet no intention of sinking individual sovereignty into a common governing body. But a legal system was formulated whereby human rights were respected, the will of the people was considered, and a strong national conscience had its inception. A criminal code and trial by jury were established, divorce was legalized, and mutual insurance against fires was instituted. Soon Christianity was accepted by majority vote and, though the Sagas tell of deeds many and evil done during those days, a beginning had been made. While Europe floundered through the darkness of the Middle Ages, Iceland went ahead; culture flourished, and religion evolved from ecclesiasticism to freer forms of worship.

Iceland's history from the thirteenth century to the middle of the nineteenth is perhaps the saddest of all national histories. The country suffered internally from cruel overlords, externally from roving bands of pirates and unscrupulous traders. National disasters — earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, disease, and famine—ravaged the land; but through it all Iceland never lost sight of the vision glimpsed in the ninth century—a good life for all people through representative Government.

INTO HANDS OF NORWAY

A free land at first, Iceland passed, through its own incompetency and its rulers' deceit, into the hands of Norway; then some centuries later into those of Denmark, regaining its freedom only in 1918. Still bound to Denmark by an elastic "Act of Union," Iceland has the opportunity of becoming wholly free in 1940, if it so desires.

Today, Iceland abounds in relative phrases. There are proportionately "more artists and poets than in any other country of the world," and both are thought of as highly honorable and worthy of subsidy by the State. "In proportion to the population, Iceland has more bookshops and publishes more books than any other country," it is averred.

That is the key, for in Iceland the whole population counts. There are no very rich and no very poor. There are no fine schools for a privileged few and second-rate schools for others; all have the same educational opportunities. There are no mansions and no slums. And because there has never been militarism, there are no war memorials or veterans' homes.

Icelandic women were among the first in Europe to gain the franchise. A daughter takes her father's first name as does a son, i. e., Jon Tomasson's children will be known as Hans Jonsson and Anna Jonsdottir. There is never any question as to whether the woman should retain her maiden name or not. She does, merely adding the title "Fru" in marriage. To an outsider this might seem confusing, but to an Icelander each person is an individual, thought of in relation to himself or herself alone and not to his ancestors. Crime has never been a problem in Iceland, though there are plenty of murders in Sagas and the people relish reading of them.

Iceland's climate is rendered moderate by the Gulf Stream and its prevailing colors are the bright greens of fertility and the blues of mountain ranges. It is so far north that its period of daylight falls into sharp divisions—all light in midsummer and no light in midwinter, but even the period of darkness is illumined by frequent and splendid shows of the Aurora Borealis.

When the weather is good, it is wholly delightful—warm sun and crisp air. It rains often and is so quickly variable that a clear day can change to a wet one in a few minutes. Every week or so a strong, cold wind straight from the North Pole blows across the island. There is little foliage; no trees to speak of save scattered birch thickets some three feet high and generously termed "forests."

Although at present there is little variation in the food from the traditional staples of meat and fish, potatoes, and milk, notable efforts are being made to use the natural hot water of the land to heat the ground and so encourage the growth of tomatoes, cucumbers, grapes, and melons. These are luxury things now, but in a few years Iceland expects to have enough for her own people as well as for export. Growing tropical fruit in an Arctic land is one of Iceland's many brave dreams, and a rapidly becoming reality.

Life in Iceland has much of a pioneer spirit to it. Everything is improving, progressing, developing. Sometimes, like children, they become more enamored of their visions than reality warrants, but they never lack vision. They go their way largely unmolested by the rest of the world, never supporting armies or navies for their protection and devoting public money so saved to public betterment. Their mountains hold no rich deposits, only portions of their land are fertile; but their seas are rich with fish and that is the chief source of income.

DEPENDS ON HERRING

There is a saying in Iceland, "It all depends on the herring." So, in midsummer, when the shoals begin to come, the people are joyful, for they know they can pay their debts and secure the supplies they so urgently need. There have been years when the herring have not come and the people have gone with needs unmet. There have been times when other nations have taken the fish from Icelandic waters and Iceland has had no redress. The World War was a hard time for Iceland, its little boats having to make the long journey across the Atlantic to America for supplies, as the North Sea was too dangerous; and this is what is now being. The Iceland is very dependent on the rest of the world, and a world at peace.

Perhaps some may wonder why such an excellent little land has not publicized itself more, and others will see that it is not for lack of imagination but is consistent with wisdom. The Icelander is as unhurried as he is independent; he places more value on mental poise than he does on material well-being. He prefers to solve his problems in his own way, and even now Icelanders face many problems in keeping their life true to their own concept with the confusing elements that have entered the modern world. Iceland is too small—not 120,000 population—for a medley of ideas to flourish well. As the poor, stony land is offset by the dramatic beauty of glaciers and hot springs, so the privations of life have developed a kind of mental contentment which the Icelander feels is worth every effort to safeguard.

The bareness of the land, its wide expanses of lava deserts and white icefields, has precluded greed and hoarding, for there is nothing to want or to keep beyond individual needs. The grass grows for sheep and cattle; the earth with a little care produces enough potatoes for each family's use; the sea and the rivers yield fish.

The Icelanders like to talk, to tell the old sagas and make up new ones, to paint pictures in bold strokes and strong colors; they like to ride over their wind-swept land on the backs of their staunch little ponies; to climb their cragged mountains; to read widely and in many tongues and follow the events of the world. Fortunate people, they are free from any sense of social competition. In the towns people are too busy, in the country the farms are too far apart, though in that land of vast reaches there is no sense of loneliness. Each farmhouse is a cultural unit, satisfied, complete, and loneliness cannot abide where there are mental resources. For generations Icelandic youth has grown up free of the thought that it may ever have to bear arms. Peace is the essence of the land, so deep-rooted that security is its concomitant.

Iceland is an intelligent land and its approach to any question is always an intellectual one. Here, people are free in the best manner of freedom, since they are surrounded by none but equals. The commonwealth did not grow but was deliberately established, because in the dawning days of the nation it was seen as the best way of meeting requirements. The Viking chieftains were by nature highly, violently independent, but in agreement they saw justice for all.

Suffering terribly through the years, land and people have come out of their chastening with a philosoph. Sans soil, gold, oil; poor until securing commercial independence, Iceland has gone bravely along the way of democratic progress—levelling mountains and exalting valleys. A country that abolished duelling in 1006 and has come close to abolishing poverty by 1940, while consistently guarding its mental life, comes near to setting an example which the world may follow—even though that country be a glacier-crowded island on the edge of the Arctic Circle.

WINSTON CHURCHILL AS SEEN BY WRITER FOR U.S. JOURNAL

First Lord of British Admiralty Said Right Man on the Bridge in Wartime

By MALLORY BROWNE

Christian Science Monitor

LONDON—On land and in the air the war has maintained for nearly six months, as this is written, what is inaccurately, but picturesquely, called its "phony" character of almost complete inactivity, so far as the Western Front is concerned. Only at sea has the conflict between Germany and the Allies followed more or less closely its expected course. Only on, over, and under the oceans have there been hostilities on big scale.

Most of the burden of the conflict, therefore, has fallen so far on the British Navy. Since the very first days of the struggle Britain's ships and sailors have borne the brunt of battle. As the Navy's wartime chief, Winston Churchill has thus been more directly and more nearly constantly in the thick of the fight than any of Britain's other political leaders.

Mr. Churchill took up his duties at the outbreak of the war. What have been his achievements in this first half year of the struggle? On his entrance into the Cabinet he was almost universally acclaimed as a strong man, a vigorous, hard-hitting, experienced politician who was also thoroughly seasoned in Admiralty ways since he had held the same post of First Lord of the Admiralty for two years of the World War. Today the question is being asked whether his actual accomplishments have borne out the general expectancy which marked his inauguration as Britain's naval chief.

In attempting to answer this, the difficulty is to know just where to distinguish between the achievements of the British Navy and those of Mr. Churchill. Obviously it would be as unfair to deprive him of any share in credit for Britain's naval successes as it would be to assume that the navy's achievements were dependent on his presence at the Admiralty.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS

What the allied naval forces have accomplished in the first six months of war is fairly clear, and the French would be the last to deny that to Britain must go the lion's share of glory. German shipping has been swept from the seas (except, of course, in the Baltic). Thanks to the swift organization of the convoy system, ship lanes which constitute the British Isles' vital link with the world have been kept open; troops are still being brought over to England, France, and the Middle East safely from Canada and Australia. A large and powerfully equipped expeditionary force was sent to France in the opening weeks of the war and is constantly being reinforced. Submarine warfare, while still a serious problem, can no longer be called a grave menace; the magnetic mines, though still causing serious losses to British and neutral vessels, appear to be reasonably well under control.

In endeavoring to assess Mr. Churchill's share in these exploits, his own accomplishments at the Admiralty, perhaps the first thing to be considered is that Navy chiefs are glad to have him there. There is no doubt whatever that the five sea lords and other high officials at the Admiralty feel that Mr. Churchill has succeeded in fusing something of his initiative, energy, and vigor into the whole organization.

This doesn't mean that they are ready to admit Mr. Churchill to be in any sense indispensable to a successful carrying out of its duties by the Navy. On the contrary, certain permanent Admiralty officials remark that it is not the business of the First Lord of the Admiralty to run the Navy; that is to say, to direct its operations. His duty, they explain, is to represent the Admiralty in the Cabinet, to get from the Government what the Navy needs in the way of funds, new ships, priority of supplies, etc.

Here the admirals give Mr. Churchill a perfect mark.

But it is open to question as to whether this rather traditional view does full justice to Mr. Churchill's work at the Admiralty. A closer study of the setup at the Trafalgar Square end of Whitehall, where the Admiralty Office is situated, throws a revealing light on the role which the present First Lord of the Admiralty has played in the direction of British naval affairs since the outbreak of the war.

The plain fact is that British naval policy in this war is directed and controlled—under the war cabinet of course—not by the Board of Admiralty or the five sea lords, but by Winston Churchill, Sir Dudley Pound, First Sea Lord, and Rear Admiral Tom S. V. Phillips, Deputy Chief of the naval staff. The Second, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Sea Lords are mainly technicians as is the director of naval operations.

CONSTANT COLLABORATION

How closely Mr. Churchill, Sir Dudley, and Rear Admiral Phillips work in intimate and constant collaboration is apparent from the fact that the First Sea Lord, at Mr. Churchill's invitation, sleeps in the drawing room of his house in the Admiralty, while Rear Admiral Phillips sleeps in the Admiralty library. They are often hard at work together between 11 p.m. and 1 a.m. Mr. Churchill seldom goes to bed before 2 a.m. and is unfailingly at work again at 7:30 a.m. He is, however, credited with indulging in a daily catnap after lunch. Part of the necessity for this unremitting labor arises from the fact, not generally recognized, that all matters of naval policy must be referred to Mr. Churchill for his decision. To illustrate how far this responsibility of the First Lord of the Admiralty is carried: if a cadet at the Naval College at Dartmouth, for example, should have conducted himself in such a way as to raise the question of his dismissal, he could be put out only with the specific approval of Mr. Churchill. Actually, closer control over all Naval matters is exercised by the First Lord of the Admiralty than is the case with any other British armed service or ministerial department.

Admittedly the tradition of the British Navy is such that the Admirals could dominate and run a weak First Lord; and if they were to run him on the rocks they are perfectly aware that the blame would fall on him as the responsible political head of the department. Clearly this is not the case with Mr. Churchill. Although a politician, he is a man whose experience and expert knowledge of naval affairs is appreciated at the Admiralty and the result is that the present First Lord, Sea Lords and other naval chiefs make a good team.

Fertile in ideas, full of initiative, Mr. Churchil is at the same time always ready to take the blame if anything goes wrong, and is not averse to letting the Admirals take most of the credit. Add to this his unquestioned success in speeding up the building of new fighting ships of all sorts, and it becomes apparent why few informed people in England today, either in or out of the Navy, question that Mr. Churchill is the right man to have on the bridge in wartime.

NEW DICTATOR IN PARAGUAY

Estigarribia, President Since August 15, Announces on Radio His New Form of Government

By JOHN W. WHITE

N.Y. Times

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina—General Jose Felix Estigarribia, who became President last August 15, has set himself up as dictator of Paraguay. In a radio talk he explained the political crisis had brought the country to the verge of anarchy accompanied by social decomposition that threatened the existence of the republic.

He said he had the undivided support of the army and navy and expressed the hope that he would receive the support of the people. He promised that as soon as he had wiped out anarchy and the people had shown fitness to govern themselves he would call elections for a constituent assembly to write a new constitution.

He declared that individualist democracy as set up by the Constitution in 1870 was now out of date and that it was necessary to establish a new form of democracy. His plans in this direction were vague but he declared the new democracy must carry over into civil life the same kind of collective cooperation that enabled Paraguay to win the Chaco war with Bolivia. He said the new democracy must also be a social and economic democracy.

The situation that General Estigarribia refers to as anarchy is a combination of the nationwide students' conflict and the refusal of the Opposition political parties to participate in elections as long as martial law is in effect.

His first move toward remedying the situation was a last-minute decision to eliminate from the Cabinet Afraim Cardozo, whose activities as Minister of Justice and Public Instruction aroused the ire of students and professors, resulting in the crisis that caused the Cabinet to resign.

Senor Cardozo had been included in the Cabinet list given out, but he boarded a river steamer for Buenos Aires recently, and his post is now filled by Salvador Villagrafa Mamodo. General Estigarribia hopes the latter can pacify the students.

The new Cabinet consists of nine Ministers instead of seven as formerly. The new Minister for Foreign Affairs is Tomas Salomoni.

The general explained in his radio talk that his decision to assume dictatorial powers was the result of the recent resignation of Congress, which consisted exclusively of representatives of the Liberal party which supports General Estigarribia. After the Cabinet resigned Liberal party leaders ordered Congress to resign.

This left the country without a legislative branch of the government and provided an excuse for General Estigarribia to take over legislation. He now will dictate laws by Presidential decrees.

This action cancels plans for Congressional elections by which General Estigarribia had hoped to re-establish a constitutional regime. The Colorado party, however, announced recently that it would not vote in the elections because General Estigarribia had not completely abolished martial law, retaining limitations on the rights of assembly and free speech, which the Opposition contended made honest elections impossible.

Immediately after his radio talk General Estigarribia issued a decree assuming all governing powers. The decree declared a "political truce" was in effect. This prohibits all political activities until General Estigarribia issues a call for a constituent Assembly. The decree also retains the judicial branch of the government and declares a commission of three jurists will be appointed to draft a new Constitution that must be inspired by principles of representative democracy.

FARLEY SAYS HE WILL SEEK PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION

Evades Question Whether Roosevelt Will Refrain from Third Term Attempt

N.Y. Times

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., March 20—Postmaster General James A. Farley put himself solidly in the fight for the Democratic Presidential nomination today, asserting without any reservations that his name would be presented to the Democratic National Convention at Chicago.

The positiveness of his statement contrasted with his previous silence over his official entrance in the State Presidential primary.

Questioned as to his intentions, Mr. Farley gave every indication of having decided to make a statement on the spur of the moment.

"To clear up any misunderstanding," the chairman of the national committee told newspaper men, "let me say that my name will be presented to the Democratic National Convention at Chicago, and that's that."

Then, after a pause, he added:

"I am sure that any one who has known me during my political career will know that I make that statement frankly and without reservation."

Mr. Farley was asked whether this meant that President Roosevelt had decided against seeking a third term, or whether he meant to convey that he was in the fight to the finish regardless of Mr. Roosevelt's intentions. Smiling, Mr. Farley evaded these questions.

SILENT ON SECOND-PLACE QUERY

He also met with "silence" a question as to whether he would accept the second place on the Democratic ticket in the event that he could not get the Presidential nomination.

Mr. Farley's statement was the high point of a visit here, where he attended a reception and conferred with State party leaders before motoring to Wellesley.

The Postmaster General first was asked about his purpose in granting William Burke, chairman of the Massachusetts State Democratic Committee, his power of attorney—as required under this State's laws—to enter a slate of delegates in the Massachusetts Presidential primary pledged to the Postmaster General.

That move, at first interpreted as meaning that Mr. Farley was in the field "on his own," subsequently became shadowed in doubt by Mr. Burke's announcement that he was entering the slate pledged to the Postmaster General in the belief that the President would not seek a third term, and with the assumption that if Mr. Roosevelt did seek such a term he (Mr. Roosevelt) would receive the support of "Mr. Farley and the Democratic party as a whole."

Until today neither the President nor Mr. Burke, nor Mr. Farley himself, had said anything to clarify the situation, which many politicians and political observers of Massachusetts found perplexing.

EX-GOVERNORS NAMED ON SLATE

Even with that doubt, however, little opposition to the Farley slate has developed in the State. With the deadline having passed for additional entrances, the Farley candidates face a contest from "independents" in only five of Massachusetts' fifteen Congressional districts.

Mr. Burke, in entering his Farley slate, used the opportunity to bring together several party factions which have been in discord for years. He picked as among the candidates for delegates at large United States Senator Walsh, Representative McCormack and former Governors Curley, Hurley and Ely. Every one agreed to serve.

"I am deeply grateful to Chairman Burke and the other Democratic leaders in Massachusetts for the great compliment they have paid me," said Mr. Farley today. "It wouldn't be human if I did not appreciate their action. I hope by my conduct in the future that I will justify the confidence Massachusetts democracy has shown in me."

At the same time, in response to questions, he said flatly that he was "in no combination with any one." Associates of Vice President Garner said in Washington earlier this week that Mr. Garner was seeking a political alliance with Mr. Farley in an effort to prevent a third-term nomination.

Mr. Farley expressed the belief, also, that the "accomplishments of the Democratic Administration will be the platform upon which the Democratic nominee for President, whoever he may be, will campaign this fall."

DIFFER ON THIRD-TERM FACTOR

WASHINGTON, March 20—Postmaster General Farley's statement at Springfield that he was in the Presidential race "without reservation" prompted some legislators to predict tonight that President Roosevelt would not seek a third term, but others were not so sure.

One group of Senators contended that Mr. Farley presumably had knowledge that Mr. Roosevelt would not enter the race. A Westerner who talked recently with Mr. Farley said that he believed the Postmaster General would have resigned before making the statement unless he had been confident that the President would not run again.

Friends of Vice President Garner, who is a candidate regardless of Mr. Roosevelt's intentions, expressed themselves as pleased with Mr. Farley's statement, even though the national chairman said in today's statement that he was "in no combination with anybody."

Some interpreted the declaration as an effort to force a statement from Mr. Roosevelt on the third-term question, and Senator McCarran, Democrat of Nevada, declared:

"I am very glad he made a positive statement. I wish that other great Americans would do likewise."

While some New Deal Senators insisted that Mr. Farley's declaration did not mean that he would actively oppose President Roosevelt if the latter should be a candidate, Senator Pepper, Democrat of Florida, expressed regret that Mr. Farley had spoken before the President announced his intentions.

One Democratic Senator, not wishing to be quoted by name, told reporters that he thought Mr. Farley was announcing his candidacy regardless of whether President Roosevelt should seek a third term.

Another expressed a belief as follows:

"Jim thinks the President is not going to run again, but he does not close the door to supporting the President if the latter runs."

SEES AIM 'TO CLEAR ATMOSPHERE'

Senator Murray, Democrat of Montana, said:

"I don't think there is much significance in it. I believe Farley is just trying to clear the atmosphere. He is not seeking, in my opinion, to damage any chance there may be for a third term."

Senator Green, Democrat of Rhode Island, commented that "Farley's coming out flatly may be helpful to his candidacy" because "the people as a rule don't like backing and filling."

Whether there was any connection between Mr. Roosevelt's statement to a press conference yesterday, and Mr. Farley's remarks today also formed a basis for speculation which found no authoritative answer. Mr. Farley himself declined any comment on this matter, according to word from Springfield.

The President yesterday branded as untrue an article in which he was purported to have told a member of Congress that Mr. Farley's religion would stir up prejudice if he were on the 1940 Democratic ticket. Simultaneously, he praised Mr. Farley's remark in a speech Saturday night that "race, color or creed" should not handicap any citizen in seeking the Presidency.

ISSUES STUDIED

By TURNER CATLEDGE

N.Y. Times

WASHINGTON—The report of the Republican Program Committee, headed by Dr. Glenn Frank, former president of the University of Wisconsin, obviously was intended to set up a chart of issues on which the Presidential and Congressional elections of 1940 might turn. How far it accomplished that end is yet to be fully disclosed, but from the report and first reactions to it, it is clear even now that this year's national political fight, as in 1936, will be waged much less over broad principles than over governmental management of policies already established.

In this regard the so-called Frank report confirmed a situation which had been indicated rather eloquently by the pre-convention Republican candidates themselves, to wit: That, with perhaps a few exceptions, the party has no thought of countering the basic purposes of the New Deal but rather to ask a mandate for change in some of the methods and personnel by which it has striven toward those purposes in the last few years.

In the matters of human relief, labor relations, social security, international affairs, national defense, farm aid and the like, the issues suggested by the Frank program, as well as by the Republican Presidential candidates, are largely questions of method and management.

STAND FOR ECONOMIES

Even on the subject of fiscal policy, where the division seems to run deepest, it is difficult to stretch the issue into the proportions of a principle, for regardless of President Roosevelt's frequent glorification of the policy of "spending to save," the current position of the Democratic high command is outwardly toward economics.

And on such a Republican's subject as tariff-making the Republican's nominees like it or not, they must stand, at least publicly, on the record which bears their party's label.

Under these circumstances, and considering certain specific manifestations, one of the chief campaign issues will be the fiscal policies of the Roosevelt administration. It is recognized by the New Dealers themselves that one of their most vulnerable spots is the deficit spending of the last few years. They can get no satisfying comfort, moreover, from the fact that so many people, high and low, might have benefited personally from these unusual expenditures.

They know that some of the chief beneficiaries are among those clamoring for more orthodox government finances. They are aware, too, that the fiscal question is taking greater hold in the country at large, and well do they remember the emotional campaign made on the same subject, and on the same side now espoused by the Republicans, by Mr. Roosevelt back in 1932.

PROBLEM OF THE NLRA

Another issue high on the list is the Roosevelt Administration's record in the matter of labor relations. No one expects the Republicans to go so far as to advocate repeal of the National Labor Relations Act. The authority and propriety of the Federal Government in safeguarding the right of collective bargaining, although strictly New Dealish in its concept, is not to be questioned. But the methods and men by which and by whom the safeguarding has been attempted will certainly be brought into the controversial side of the campaign.

The question of relief must of necessity be an issue in some degree, but here again no one is seriously going to advocate discontinuance of the Federal Government's responsibilities in this regard.

Stanford Runner Breaks ¾ Mile Run Record

Domei Tsushin

PALO ALTO, California, April 19—Stanford University yesterday claimed another world's track record, when Paul Moore, distance runner, cracked the record in the three-quarter mile run at the Stanford-San Jose State College dual meet held at Angell Field.

Moore, setting a sizzling pace, was clocked in 2 minutes and 58.7 seconds. He bettered the 2:59.7 mark set, on March 17 by Chuck Fenske, of the Indiana State Police, at the 12th Annual Armour Tech Relays held on the University of Chicago, indoor dirt oval. The recognition of the latter's time is doubtful as he was paced by two runners.

The Stanford runner's record also surpassed the present recognized world's record of 3:00.6 made in 1931 by Jules Ladouaegue, of France.

MORAL EMBARGO OF U.S. FELT BY SOVIET RUSSIA

Shipments of Materials Needed for Airplane Manufacture Are Stopped

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON—Shipments to Soviet Russia of American metals, especially molybdenum and aluminum, necessary to the manufacture of airplanes, have been reduced to the barest trickle after three months of President Roosevelt's "moral embargo," State Department officials said recently. However, shipments to neutrals may actually have been intended for Russia, and have reached there indirectly.

Despite what is described here as "every effort" being made by Amtorg, the official Russian commercial organization in this country to scour the United States for these strategic metals, a combination of patriotism and State Department pressure is said to have made them virtually unavailable.

Denying that American molybdenum companies were not cooperating in the "moral embargo," an official pointed out that whereas shipments of this metal were heavy during December, due to previous committments, they practically vanished during the first two months of this year, the last shipment, also due to previous committments, being one of some 80 tons in the middle of February. Every American molybdenum company has promised complete cooperation, it was added.

NO NICKEL FROM CANADA

The embargo on molybdenum, important as a hardener for steel, is made particularly efficacious by the fact that Canada is no longer exporting nickel, a competitive product, direct to Russia, the same official declared.

Corroboration to this was given by Frank Ashton-Gwatkin, an adviser on policy to the British Ministry of Economic Warfare and now in this country with Prof. Charles Rist, a former Deputy Governor of the Bank of France, to settle questions arising between the United States and the Allies over the blockade of Germany. Mr. Ashton-Gwatkin declared that reports of nickel shipments to Russia from Canada were false and that he could state categorically that none were being made.

One leak to Soviet Russia in strategic materials that has not been completely plugged is in tin, and it is expected that this will soon be made 100 per cent complete.

It is in the embargo on the export of aviation gasoline and in the ban on further delivery of "plans, plants, manufacturing rights or technical information required for the production of high quality aviation gasoline" to the Soviet Union that the State Department feels it has struck the most decisive blow against that country's military power.

Word received here indicates that the Russians have neither the equipment nor the knowledge at the present time to develop the high-octane gasoline necessary for the highest performance in the latest types of military aircraft. It is also reported that the Russian Army on the Finnish front found it necessary to use ordinary gas "leaded up" and that this gas can be used only in older and less sensitive planes.

This reported inability of the Russians to use the latest type planes because of the lack of aviation gas would seriously weaken their efficiency against any first-class air power, experts hold. Thus the American ruling on aviation gas is seen here as a possible major factor in deterring Soviet leaders from attempting an attack upon any neighboring nation possessing an air force capable of even a moderate defense.

PACIFIC LEAK SEEN

WASHINGTON—Frank Ashton-Gwatkin, Advisor to the British Ministry of Economics, who is in the United States on an official mission disclosed that the Allies would like to extend their blockade into the Pacific so as to cut off American shipments of war supplies to Russia.

The British expert told reporters that the Allies believed a large portion of the war materials—especially tin, copper and gasoline—now being sent from Pacific ports to Vladivostok, Russia, were destined to be shipped over the Trans-Siberian Railway to Germany.

U.S. BROADCASTING COMPANIES "SELLING AMERICA" ABROAD

14 Stations Licensed For Battle of Air Waves; NBC Spends $150,000 A Year

By EARL SPARLING

The American Mercury

To multitudes of Frenchmen, America is not Uncle Sam but Monsieur Thomas. In Germany it is Herr Marsching; in Italy, Signora Murray. Among the 20 Latin-American republics it will be variously Senhor Deter to Brazilians, Senor Carvajal to Spanish-speaking peoples, or perhaps Senora Olga Andre.

Unknown and unheard by North Americans, these and a few dozen others sell American democracy to the world in easy daily doses.

Sitting in a cluttered 9-by-12 broadcasting studio, Monsieur Richard Thomas speaks casually across 3000 miles of ocean. His perfect French was learned while he was a student of dramatics at the Comedie Francaise. Chicago-born and barely 30, he speaks with linguistical and psychological effectiveness because he has lived or traveled in 20 foreign lands.

STILL A STEPCHILD

The studio is the smallest in the place, for international short-wave broadcasting is still a stepchild of the broadcasting companies. It costs money, as yet produces no income. Our young spokesman must handle by himself all the mechanical and production detail which ordinarily would require an operating staff of four to six. A dozen keys, various switches, a row of colored lights—and when Monsieur is neither pushing keys nor watching lights he plays music records or reads into the microphone from a script which he has prepared himself.

For a solid hour, 3 to 4 p.m., the message goes to France. Then with an "au revoir, mes amis," M. Thomas slips out of the chair and another young man slips into it. The successor pushes the same buttons, watches the same lights. But out in Bound Brook, N. J., where these programs are flashed into the ether, an engineer has thrown switches that shift the radio beam from Europe to Brazil. The daily broadside to Latin America has begun. It will continue from this one National Broadcasting Company studio for nine unbroken hours: an hour in Portuguese, two in Spanish, back to Brazil for another hour in Portuguese, then two more in Spanish, one in English, and a final two in Spanish. Something similar is happening in a dozen other studios from Boston to Miami Beach, from Schenectady to San Francisco.

Senhor Arthur S. Deter, 32, now speaking to the Brazilians, was born in Rio de Janeiro of American missionary parents and was graduated from Parana University in Brazil with a medical degree. He has worked as a harvest hand, as an extra in Hollywood; he has sailed on tramp steamers as an able-bodied seaman, has an amateur pilot's license.

Senhor Deter starts his Brazilian hour with a digest of the world's news. Later he too will become a concert master and wrestle with music records, but news on-the-hour-by-the-hour is a must policy for NBC foreign-language programs.

From Italy, from Germany, from France and England come letters stating that American broadcasts afford listeners in those countries their only opportunity to obtain uncensored news.

All the major nations are engaged in this battle of the air waves. The United States has licensed 14 stations for international broadcasts. Two of them—WDJM, a commercial station in Miami, and WCBI, the Chicago Federation of Labor station—are small. The major license-holders are: NBC, Columbia, General Electric, Westinghouse, World Wide Broadcasting Corporation, Crosley Corporation in Cincinnati, and WCAU Broadcasting Company, Philadelphia.

WAVE VARIATION

These stations operate at different hours on 37 frequencies allocated to this country by international agreement. Our stations and foreign stations are sending at the same time. Without wave variation it would be a mess. But no domestic station wants to jam a foreign station, because the foreign station can retaliate. The Union Internationale de Radio, Brussels, watches for any crowding.

All our stations, be it noted, are privately owned and operated and, except for World Wide, all by commercial companies. Each station at large outlay and no profit has built costly sending equipment and organized large international staffs.

Columbia Broadcasting System, with a staff of 18, is doing an outstanding job, with good-will broadcasts every day from two stations. At NBC, 18 persons are regularly on the air, the voice of America in six languages.

A stranger wandering into one of these international departments might think himself in a madhouse. A loud-speaker blaring the current program competes with a teletype bringing the latest news. A dozen persons talk at various desks in half a dozen languages. The place looks like a combination newspaper office, travel agency, mail room and research library. Maps hang on every wall, for these workers live with geography.

If President Roosevelt decides suddenly to give a fireside chat, it is, of course, must business for raido. The text of his address often is released only half an hour before he begins talking. As the President speaks his voice is picked up and flashed to the world. At the same time a facsimile record is made, to be broadcast later to English-speaking people who sleep while we are up and shouting. Meanwhile the translators are busy putting the speech into five languages. Long after the President himself has gone to sleep his words will be going out to the world—perhaps three times in Spanish, twice in Portuguese, once each in French, German and Italian.

The international day at NBC ends at 1 a.m., with the final Spanish hour. Half an hour later the night editor arrives and the new day starts. All through the early morning he and his assistants read from the teletype what the world is saying and winnow out what shall be used. Broadcasting in English begins at 9 a.m., primarily for British ears. Foreign-language broadcasts start at 1 p.m. and, except for one evening English hour, continue until signing-off time.

During the morning Monsieur Thomas in clipped American has given "Highlights of Hollywood" on the British hour. Now at three he gives the news in his best Parisian and a talk, "The Franco-American Globe-Trotter." At noon in English Fernando de Sa has discussed American aviation. At four he slides into the chair, as monsieur slides out, to give in Portuguese "The Parade of the States of Brazil."

LOVE POETRY

Latin Americans love poetry and every little town has its laureate. NBC capitalized on this by asking all to send their masterpieces, to be read weekly on the international ether. American stations are quick to invite visiting Latin-American dignitaries to broadcast to their native countries. During the New York World's Fair more than 130 persons were coaxed from the Latin-American pavilions to become international radio figures.

Selling America costs the privately operated stations money. NBC spends some $150,000 a year. Walter St Lemmon, president of the World Wide Broadcasting Foundation and its University of the Air—a non-commercial enterprise sending from the University Club in Boston, helped by the staffs of Harvard and other universities—estimates its operating cost at $100,000 a year, half of which has been supplied lately by Rockefeller Foundation.

ONE OF GREATEST WAR SPECTACLES

NIGHT 'SNAPS' ARE OUTGROWTH OF FAST LENS

Camera Addicts Given Training in Nocturnal Photographic Tricks

By JACOB DESCHIN

Christian Science Monitor

Light makes the picture. Therefore, wherever light happens to be available, by pre-arrangement or otherwise, picture-making with a camera becomes a possibility. By this token, the lightings encountered by the sauntering camera fan in his night picture-hunting excursions, provide him with the principal means for making an impression on film of a promising subject.

Photography outdoors at night has always been possible provided the necessary ingredient, light, was present. It was simply a matter o setting up a tripod or other support and permitting the lens to be open long enough for the film emulsion to absorb the image. However, it is only within the last few years that snapshots, not more time exposures, have been employed in shooting outdoor night scenes. Today it is a common experience among even the lowliest of amateurs to make successful snapshots of brightly lighted street scenes, store windows, theater lobbies, and so on.

Two modern advances have brought this change about. One is that of the "fast" lens which, because of its great size admits more light into the camera during a given period of time, and the other is the "fast" film emulsion. The latter, having been made extra-sensitive to light, needs to be exposed for a relatively shorter period under given light conditions than is possible with "slower" films. The combination of the fast lens and the fast film has opened up many new fields to the camera worker that hitherto had been thought entirely beyond the realm of the photographic medium.

ENTER MINIATURE CAMERA

The miniature camera is chiefly responsible for the increase in the speed of lenses. Because of the small film area involved, short-focus lenses of large diameter can be employed, with the consequence that a lens of f/2 aperture, having a diameter of only one-half the focal length of the lens, can be used without incurring the disadvantage of an extremely shallow depth of field. The desire for large-aperture lenses naturally has been extended to larger cameras than miniature, but due to the resulting poor depth of field, it has been found unfeasible to increase the maximum aperture beyond f/2.8 or f/2.9. In fact, the most common for larger cameras are the apertures, or speeds, f/3.5 and f/4.5.

With rapid advances in the speed of film emulsions, however, the effect has been that of making high-speed lenses unnecessary, so that even the worker having a miniature camera equipped with a lens of "only" f/3.5 or f/4.5 speed enjoys equal opportunity with those possessing faster lenses. Curiously, probably without realizing it, the manufacturers of lenses are, after a fashion, continuously in competition with the makers of film emulsions. The former, being limited by definite optical laws with which no ingenuity seems able to cope, has become outdistanced in the race for speed because film emulsions are able to continue to increase in speed without any apparent barrier. Even the hazards offered by the problems of fine grain and image contrast are no obstacles, for the fastest films available today, if properly developed in a fine grain developer, will yield sharp and clean enlargements from miniature negatives.

In this connection, it is interesting to recall that the present speed of film emulsions appeared so impossible only five or six years ago that when C. W. Gibbs, A. R. P. S., said in American Annual of Photography 1931 that the then top speed of 800 H. & D. (Weston 16) could be increased 10 times, he was soundly rebuked for making so rash a statement. However, this speed is today not only an actuality but it has even exceeded. And the remarkable thing about it is that this striking advance is not merely a laboratory triumph, the application of which is reserved alone for technical specialists, but is available to the mass of workers so that the veriest tyro sporting a cheap box camera may use it as well as the professional.

The introduction of highly sensitive film naturally was designed for use under difficult lighting conditions, not only at night, both indoors and out, but during the day as well. When the sky is heavily overcast or when it is desired to make a picture in deep woods, fast film renders a distinct service even when used in daylight. But it is the night shots outdoors, particularly in town and city streets, and pictures in theaters and at night in homes, that amateur workers usually associate with extra fast films. It is true that even when using fast films many night subjects require at least a short time exposure; this for reasons of depth of field, in which case the lens diaphragm must be stopped down sufficiently to include in sharp focus all of the desired area. But in such cases fast films make the time exposure a matter of seconds, whereas the slowed film would call for minutes.

Many night subjects, however, may be recorded on fast film with snapshot exposures varying from about 1-100th of a second to 1-5th, depending on the speed on the lens and the diaphragm opening or f/stop used. For hand exposures of 1-5th and 1-10th, it is advised that the photographer lean against a support of some sort or steady himself in some other way. This becomes the more important the smaller the negative and the greater the intended print enlargement; the slightest vibration of the camera during the exposure, while it may not always be noticed in a two or three-times enlargement, would show this movement in a greater enlargement. Where possible, when shooting at 1-10th of a second or longer, it is strongly advised that a tripod or other firm support be employed.

BELLIGERENT POWERS EXPECT SPREAD OF WAR TO BLACK SEA

Would Be Theater of Hostilities For First Time Since Crimean Campaign of 1854

By LORD STRABOLGI

Christian Science Monitor

All the three belligerent Powers expect the European war to spread to the Black Sea. They expect it to happen this year, probably in the spring.

The Germans and their Russian friends point to the large Allied Army in the Levant under the command of Gen. Maxime Weygand. They argue that this great force, consisting of French, British, Australian, New Zealand, and Indian troops, with many brigades of native troops, is concentrated in the eastern end of the Mediterranean for offensive purposes. This large force, plentifully equipped with airplanes, motor transport and all the modern weapons of war, is encamped in Egypt, Palestine, and Syria.

The German diplomats impress on their Russian colleagues, in season and out of season, that these forces are intended to support a Turkish attack on the Russian provinces of Trans-Caucasia—Georgia, Armenia, and Azerbaijan; and that their targets are the great oil fields of Baku.

The Allies describe these forces as a strategical reserve. Britain and France have guaranteed the integrity of Greece, Rumania, and Turkey, and must be ready to go to their help. The Italians, in certain eventualities, might threaten Egypt and the Suez Canal. We can rule out any calculations as to the attitude of Italy in this study, and examine the possibilities of the war spreading to the Black Sea and the results which would follow.

POSSIBLE MOVES REVEALED

The Black Sea might become a theater of war for the first time since the Crimean campaign of 1854 under one or other of the following circumstances:

1. Rumania might be attacked by Germany, and in that case it is taken for granted that Turkey will allow the passage of a British and French fleet and transports through the Dardanelles and the Bosporus in order to go to Rumania's assistance. Under the Montreux Convention of 1936 Turkey maintained the right to keep the Straits closed in peace and war unless either it is attacked or help is required to be sent through them for the support and help of a member of the League of Nations threatened by aggression. Rumania is a member of the League of Nations and would be a victim of aggression. At the conference which ended in the Montreux Agreement, the Soviet delegates, headed by Maxim Litvinoff, then the Commissar for Foreign Affairs, strove hard to have the Straits closed in peace and war under all circumstances. They were overborne.

2. Russia might attack Turkey.

3. Russia might attack Rumania and, once again, Turkey might consider it politic to allow the Allied Fleet through the Straits. Under the terms of the Anglo-Turkish and Franco-Turkish Treaties of Mutual Assistance, Turkey is not bound to embark on courses which would bring it into direct conflict with Russia. What Turkey would actually do remains to be seen.

TURK BORDERS STRENGTHENED

On the one hand it has suffered severely by the recent earthquakes and floods. On the other hand its rearmament has proceeded apace, its naturally difficult frontier with Georgia and Armenia has been immensely strengthened, and a Russian attack on Rumania would be regarded as another stage in the resumed march of the Russian Imperialists on Constantinople.

The Turks are well aware of the old, ingrained, almost hereditary, ambition of the Russians to possess Constantinople. No matter what form of Government rules at Moscow, this ambition of Catherine the Great and every subsequent Russian ruler is remembered. It has become as much a part of the national policy of Russia as the Monroe Doctrine is of the people of the United States of America.

ADVANTAGEOUS FOR ALLIES

For Britain and France an extension of the war to the Black Sea would have strategical advantages, especially if the extension was against Germany only, and if open war could be avoided with the Soviets. With an unchallenged command of the seas it would be easier for France and Britain to send forces to the assistance of Rumania by water than it would be for the Germans to advance by land through Hungary or southern Poland. It is true that this would place an extra strain on their merchant shipping resources, yet it is easier to send large number of troops, with their weapons and supplies, by sea than it is to move them by land, especially as the routes to Rumania are badly served by railways and roads. By carrying the war into the Black Sea the Allies would be able to tighen up the blockade of Germany.

With ice melting on the Danube, arrangements have been made to send oil from the Russian port of Batum by sea to the Bulgarian port of Varna and the Rumanian ports of Constanta and Galatz. Thence it would be shipped to Germany in the large Danube oil barges. The route to Galatz is the most convenient, as oil tankers can navigate the Danube up to this point, whence their cargoes would be transhipped. Arrangements have also been made to send iron ore from the Russian port of Novorossisk to Germany by the same routes.

Under international law the Allies would be within their full rights in declaring these shipments as contrabrand and stopping them. The Soviet Government would protest and they would also object to war operations of any kind in the Black Sea. But, unless the Russians propose to enter into open conflict with Britain and France, they could do no more than protest.

TRADE ARTERY FOR RUSSIA

The Black Sea is a vital trade artery for Russia also. Its principal oil fields, supplying the thickly populated districts of Western Russia, lie round Baku on the western shore of the Caspian and in the Emba district on the eastern side of the Caspian Sea.

The most convenient route for this oil is from Baku, where it is taken by pipe line to Batum, and from there shipped to the Russian port of Odessa. The direct railway line from Baku by way of Rostov-on-Don to Moscow is a much longer haul, the railways are known to be in weak condition, and the cutting off of the oil trade between Batum and Odessa would be a serious inconvenience.

Furthermore, if the Turks were warring against Russia, an advance by land on Baku and the sezure of the oil fields would be a possibility. It is this threat which is kept before the eyes of the Soviet leaders by German diplomats.

In any case Baku would be exposed to air attack. So seriously has this threat been taken by the Russians that they have actually agreed to the loan of the services of German military engineers to strengthen the fortifications of Batum.

AMERICAN JEWS ADOPT PROGRAM

Designed to Safeguard Rights in U.S., Assure Full Liberty in Europe

N.Y. Times

WASHINGTON—The American Jewish Congress, at its final sessions here recently, adopted a program designed to safeguard the rights of Jews in the United States against anti-semitism, and, abroad, to assist and further the postwar restoration and maintenance of Jewish rights by a peace conference in which will be created and assured a "new system of international morality and justice."

The program's objectives and methods were approved and endorsed, among others, by Senator Mead of New York, Bishop James E. Freeman of Washington, Rabbi Leon Fram of Detroit and Count Jerzy Potocki, Ambassador of Poland.

Addressing a luncheon symposium on "good neighbor relations," the Polish Ambassador predicted that whatever the future of Europe may be, "for Poland's restoration, freedom and future, Christian and Jews united by suffering, will fight together in a common cause, and win the battle not only for Poland but for the future of Europe and the whole world."

GENEVA INSTITUTE APPROVED

As the most important present contribution to the solution of the Jewish problem abroad, the convention voted approval of a resolution presented by Dr. Samuel Margoshes, editor of The Day, to support the establishment by the World Jewish Congress of a special institute in Geneva for the preparation, under the direction of experts in international law, of the peace aims of the Jewish people, and their presentation at the peace conference after the war in Europe.

The cooperation in this institute of every important Jewish organization in America and elsewhere will be sought.

Support of the effort to obtain full recognition of Jewish rights in Palestine was voted.

On the home front, a proposal to check infiltration into the United States of radical and anti-democratic propaganda and discrimination against Jews in employment was approved. Two permanent and one special commission were suggested, the latter for the purpose of dealing nationally and locally with the promotion of Good Neighbor relations.

VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE ONE AIM

Of the two additional permanent commissions, one will be on vocational guidance, and the other a commission on law and legislation, to deal with the local aspects of the anti-semitic problem.

Development of national youth movement was authorized by the convention.

The relationship of the American Jewish Congress to the General Jewish Council was the subject of prolonged discussion. The convention voted to maintain its membership in the council, while protesting its recently announced policy decision.

The resolution, proposed by Louis Lipsky of New York, and approved by the convention, directed the members of the American Jewish Congress to continue to urge on the three other member groups reconsideration and replacement of the present council policy by one which, it was said, will allow it to function as the directing agency in the defense of Jewish rights, in harmony with the purpose for which it was created in 1938.

A four-point program was approved by the convention. It called for the extension of council membership to include adequate representation of other American Jewish groups; the pooling of fund-raising endeavors for all four of the present member agencies, and the fixing of their budgets; the creation and recognition of local county councils organized on a representative basis under council supervision, and effective coordination under direct supervision of the existing diverse activities of the four agencies.

To carry out the directions of the convention, Dr. Stephen S. Wise was re-elected president. Judge Nathan D. Perlman of New York, vice-president; Louis Lipsky, chairman of the governing council; Carl Sherman, former Attorney General of New York State, chairman of the administrative committee, and Max Wolff, Grand Master of the I. O. B. A., chairman of the national council and affiliates of the American Jewish Congress.

LONDON'S POETICAL JUNK 'KING' IS LIKE A PAGE FROM DICKENS

Christian Science Monitor

LONDON—Burden is the name; burden the business; but there's nothing burdensome about either.

This may sound a little like part of an acrostic, but there's no puzzle about it. It is a plain statement of fact which serves to introduce a previously little-known Londoner whose fame is spreading although his business might be said to be contracting. Contracting to take a load off householders' thoughts at the same time as he takes one off their attics, boxrooms, kitchens, and gardensheds.

This is G. Burden, "King" of London's junk men, a trader with an individual approach to his business. Mr. Burden is known as the man who unburdens householders of their useless junk with the aid of a song, a truck, a pair of willing hands and no prejudices.

Now that Wealth from Waste (It used to be called Refuse Disposal) is an essential part of the national effort with a Government Controler in charge of the salvage campaign, the junk business has moved a few rungs up the social ladder. But that doesn't explain Mr. Burden's climb to eminence.

Mr. Burden's most appreciated claim to fame is that, while most anyone can call for junk with a loud voice and a barrow, he calls for it with a few bits of philosophy and quite a lot of poetry.

To herald his approach Mr. Burden distributes around the houses of his "kingdom" a proclamation, which, intimating that he will call "in two hours" waxes lyrical about the junk business in a verse of 26 lines.

The above with most respectful feeling,
Begs leave to inform you what he deals in,
He has not come your purse to try,
Yourself shall sell and he to buy.

So sings Mr. Burden, going on to catalogue, in galloping meter and some disregard for rhyme, a number of valueless valuables which he is prepared to cart away, including, "Floorcloth, dust rags; old roping, sacking, and old bags," as well as "boots, shoes and stockings, jackets, trousers, and bed ticking," and a number of other things.

His lyric closes with these words:

N. B. Over your dwelling give a glance,
You'll never have a better chance,
My price is good, my weights are just,
And mind, I'll never ask for trust,
So please to look up if but a handful,
And for the same I will be thankful.

In any strict literary community, Mr. Burden might not get his poet's license. But he gets business—and he gives householders a lesson which His Majesty's Controller of Salvage, at the Ministry of Supply, Adelphi, London, is anxious to get over to the people.

For the final touch in Mr. Burden's proclamation is the request, "Please keep this circular until called for. If you are going out, please leave this circular with your neighbor," so that it can be collected and used again.

U.S. Census Rift Laid To a Misplaced Comma

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON—A misplaced comma was blamed recently for much of the present uproar over census "snooping."

Dr. Willard L. Thorp, economic adviser to the Secretary of Commerce, told a Senate subcommittee considering elimination of income questions from the 1940 census schedule he believed the public realized it did not have to report the amount of "money, wages or salary" received, but only the amount of money wages or salary.

Most of the complaints against the census, Dr. Thorp maintained, are coming from wealthy persons who resent being forced to disclose amounts of income received from stocks, annuities, real estate, and other investments.

The lower third, in whose incomes the Government is most interested, do not object to furnishing information as to their wages, he held.

BACKED BY C. I. O.

Dr. Throp's contention was strengthened by testimony of Ralph Hetzel, director of the unemployment division of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, who said the C. I. O. strongly supports census questions on income, as essential background for social legislation.

Pointing out that the census enumerator will ask for no information as to income from business or professional enterprise, interest, dividends, rent or any other non-wage source, Dr. Thorp indicated that Senator Charles W. Tobey (R) of New Hampshire sponsor of the Senate resolution had misled a radio audience.

"It is easy to omit commas on the radio," Dr. Thorp commented.

He told the committee he saw no way of measuring unemployment in the United States today without income statistics, and expressed anxiety lest the present attacks have the effect of discrediting the [illegible] 1940 census.

CANNOT ALLOW DEBATES

Estimating that it will take only eight minutes for a householder to answer all the questions on the census schedule, Dr. Thorp admitted, "Of course, if the enumerator has to stop and discuss the bill of rights everywhere he goes, he won't finish in that time."

"Up in my state, he won't get inside the front door in eight minutes," commented Senator Wallace H. White (R) of Maine.

Dr. Thorp argued that while questions on income were not specifically authorized by the 1929 census law under which the Census Bureau still operates, Congress in 1937 recognized the necessity of income questions in connection with the Biggers special unemployment census.

N.Y. Times

OSLO—If one were to try to sum up in a few words the impression left by the last few hectic weeks in Scandinavia, by constant watching of the fluctuating emotional barometer, by many conversations with statesmen, business men and people in other walks of life, by the crisis precipitated by the defeat of Finland and its aftermath, one might say that in these northern peninsulas virtually utopian communities seemed to face a greater danger than at any time in 125 years. It is a danger which they may not be able to ward off or to meet satisfactorily, particularly if they remain disunited.

The Scandinavian countries are usually called small nations. They are small in population, they are small in those forces of destruction which have become the primary criterion for measuring the influence of nations. But a glance at the map suffices to show how enormous they are in area and how great they are in resources.

They are still greater—greater than the two gigantic neighbors who are nearest and who seem most menacing—in something which is not readily measurable but which may perhaps be called a sense of social justice and of the human values which mere physical or economic or military greatness sometimes tends to destroy. In other words, they are highly civilized countries, judged by the advanced standard of welfare and education which they have achieved for their peoples—so civilized that they have an exceedingly rough time in the somewhat brutal world which surrounds them.

They are about as nearly utopian as any region to be found at this moment upon the surface of this agitated globe. The social problems which have beset the greater nations and led to revolutions, wars, depressions and New Deals have been approximately solved in Scandinavia—without much friction or fuss or advertisement.

APPROXIMATE UTOPIAS

Yet these countries have become famous as approximate utopias. Students of cooperative marketing everywhere have been inspired by the example of Denmark. Economists throughout the world have shown keen interest in the managed currency of Sweden. Specialists in labor and social legislation often cite the achievements of Norway.

Perhaps these problems were less difficult to solve in the smaller laboratories of the Scandinavian countries. On the other hand, these nations were more at the mercy of outside forces than, for instance, the United States. At any rate, they stand as memorable examples of how abundantly and tranquilly and reasonably entire populations can live when they manage their collective existence intelligently.

But there is one problem that Scandinavia has not solved, and the failure to solve it may place all the other admirable achievements in jeopardy. That problem is how to live in a world of armed, predatory powers having little respect for the standards of these small utopias. The tragedy—or the potential tragedy—is that the Scandinavian countries really cannot solve this problem. They are too small and too powerless and would still remain so even if they were armed to the teeth.

Consequently, they are driven to various expedients—to hope that somehow a balance between the nearest great powers may be restored in such a way as to relieve pressure upon them; to wish that the European war might end soon in some rational accommodation; to assume that the aggressors may grow tired of conquest and settle down quietly; to imagine that in twentieth-century Europe armed violence is a momentary aberration which must pass away.

If this wishful thinking seems utopian it is hardly surprising that it is to be found in these Scandinavian utopias. It is far less surprising here than it was in Britain and France, where both socialistic and capitalistic pacifists persisted in hoping for appeasement as late as 1938. Disillusioned Britain and France could at least arm and prepare to face the most formidable antagonists, while the Scandinavians must go on hoping.

WOULD HAVE TO RELY ON BRITAIN

They can arm and prepare for common defensive policies so far as these policies are not vetoed by the great powers. Nobody imagines that even a solidly united Scandinavia could stand up to a major aggressor without help from another large nation. An armed Scandinavia might make invasion uninviting even to the greatest of its neighbors. But in case of attack by Germany these northern countries would have to rely upon Britain's aid—just as in the past they trusted to Germany to defend them against Russia.

No traveler who appreciates scenery and architecture and comfort and good food and gentle manners can fail to be charmed by these three northern countries, where many of the best qualities and a minimum of the worst qualities of Europe are concentrated. He will long remember the ancient island, the modern brick tower, the winding river, the almost endless skerries of Stockholm, the provincial neatness and dignity of Oslo, the quiet sumptuousness and the greenish copper roofs of Copenhagen, the endless forests and lakes and the spick-and-span villages with red tile roofs and timbered houses in Sweden, the mountainous expanse of Norway, meeting the sea in fjords now glistennig with ice and snow; the fertile farms and the green landscape and brick castles of Denmark, and everywhere in all three countries superb cooking—but a certain fussiness about the time and the alcoholic content of drinks.

Telephone boxes deep in Swedish forests, luxurious ultra-modern ships plying along the far northern coast of Norway, trains completely equipped with dining and sleeping cars that penetrate the Arctic mountains of Laptand, seem symbols of the ingenuity and organization which have created almost utopian communities on this northwestern edge of Europe. The landscape in Sweden and Norway is often reminiscent of the American and Canadian Northwest, and so is the modernity of trains, ships, hotels and industries.

Sweden is a Baltic country with an interest in Finland of which she herself had hardly measured the extent until the Russian appropriation of Finnish territory. Her position obliges her to turn her eyes toward Russia and Germany and to long for the day when they will cease to be partners and the one will again be a balance for the other in the Baltic. The Russian-German pact staggered the Swedes, who were haunted by the vision of Hitler and Stalin meeting on the bridge at Tilsit as Napoleon and Alexander did. Sweden's high-quality iron ore is one of the stakes of war and a source of her apprehension.

This iron has troubled Norway too, for in winter it is carried from Northern Sweden down to the Norwegian port of Narvik and there loaded into British and German ships. The German ships hug the Norwegian shores as they move south, thus remaining as long as possible in territorial waters where the British hesitate to intercept them. Some Norwegians fear that the British may show less compunction as the war advances and may block this German traffic.

It is upon the seas to the west and south that Norway's principal attention is directed and from which her principal revenues come. She is of the Atlantic rather than the Baltic world and more dependent upon shipping than Sweden is. She is thus closer to Britain in her interests and manner of life.

"We must cross the North Sea if we are to live," said a distinguished Norwegian to the writer. Hence Norway's interest in Baltic politics and even in Baltic aggression is less than Sweden's—until the day when Russia tries to press to the Atlantic.

When Europe was at peace Denmark lived largely by supplying the British breakfast table with bacon and butter. This function is now diminished, as Denmark—as some Danes put it—has become a German province.

"The pressure from Germany suffocates us," said a Dane. "To be neutral we must in effect be pro-German. Restraint has become habitual and we find relief even in reading the British press and in listening to the British radio."

Caricatures of Hitler may not be published in Denmark; Rauschning's book, "Hitler Speaks," is banned there. In movie theaters audiences are warned not to indulge in applause that might have political significance.

CANNOT RESIST

Denmark does not resist. Denmark cannot resist. It has been obliged to surrender to the pressure from Berlin which spreads over all Scandinavia, but weighs less heavily north of the Baltic and the Skagerrak.

Germany has her own conception of utopia: The Nazi Reich spreading eastward and sweeping Central Europe into the coordinate economic unit which—if all goes well—will form Germany's expanded "living space."

Scandinavia has not yet been allotted a definite place within this living space and hopes that she will never be. But many in the north regard this eventuality as the greater of the dangers which may face these democratic utopias, where a high degree of social organization and social justice has been accompanied by preservation of individual liberty.

New Yorkers Get Television Show Of Own City

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, April 11—An almost perfect test of television from the sky was made in New York City, showing the great metropolitan area to hundreds of television-set owners just as it looks to aviators flying high above the city.

Viewers sitting before their screens in the comfort of their homes easily picked out notable landmarks, saw automobiles and people along the streets, looked down the silvery Hudson and got a bird's-eye-view of the World Fair grounds.

Highlight of the television from the sky came near the end of the show when views of the 21-passenger plane accompanying the camera-plane were thrown on the screen. Aboard were newspapermen looking onto a specially-installed receiver to see their own plane in action.

WORLD SHY OF OIL FUEL

'Ersatz' Gasolines Highly Developed—Petroleum Plentiful in U. S.

N.Y. Times

WASHINGTON—Use of synthetic gasoline and other substitute motor fuels in Germany, Great Britain, France, Japan, Italy and many other nations evidences a worldwide petroleum shortage. Development of new fuels in receiving serious consideration in the United States, although the American supply of pertoleum products continues adequate, with no reason to expect a shortage for some years to come.

Paul L. Hopper, chief of the fuels section of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, points out that the United States and Soviet Russia alone among the great nations obtain their petroleum requirements from within their own boundaries.

The United States Bureau of Mines is experimenting with various special fuels in its laboratories. One of the largest of American coal companies is a part owner of an international organization controlling the world rights to the most successful of the German processes.

WESTERN STATES HAVE SHALES

"In the future," said Mr. Hopper, "the shales of Utah, Nevada' Colorado and Wyoming may become a very important source of mineral oil supply."

The United States Navy has already acquired title to some of the most valuable of these shales.

"Until recent years," said Mr. Hopper, "nations without sufficient petroleum were content to import their needs. Alternative sources of supply assured competitive prices in world markets; liquefaction of coal was in the experimental stage and there was little inclination anywhere to try out substitute motor fuels.

"Any appraisal of the manufacture and use of synthetic and substitute motor fuels, not including shale oils, must be reflected largely in the experience of the Germans. Germans developed the basic processes for the liquefaction of coal. It was in Germany that alcohol, benzol and methanol were first utilized as motor fuels, and it was also in Germany that the use of miscellaneous substitutes first attained significant proportions."

AID WAR ECONOMY

That synthetic fuels are an important cog in the German war machine is known. Just how much synthetic gasoline is now being produced is a carefully guarded military secret. That the output runs into the millions of barrels is certain, for in 1937, when few believed the present war possible, the synthetic gasoline production approximated 7,000,000 barrles in addition to more than 850,000 barrels of Diesel oil and more than 2,000,000 barrels of fuel oil.

Since that time other plants have been built. Recent information gathered by the Department of Commerce says that a huge plant under construction will be partially in operation before the end of this year. In Great Britain and in France, where there is no such problem as Germany must solve, the matter of synthetics and substitute fuels nevertheless a matter of continuing experimentation. England has several plants now in operation.

In Italy, a nation without natural oil resources, the Government by bounties and in other ways has been for several years seeking to create an industry of sufficient size and output to make Italy less dependent upon other countries for liquid fuels.

Japan's predicament is much like and second only to Germany's. The synthetic program in Japan plans for an annual production of 14,000,000 barrels by 1944. One of the principal Japanese plants is under army and navy administration.

Substitute fuels—those which include substances other than petroleum, oil shale, synthetics derived from coal and motor fuel blends utilizable in internal combustion engines—are all of importance, but few have reached the stage where commercial exploitation is warranted. Among, gaseous fuels utilized in the compressed state are coal gas resulting from the carbonization of coal, natural gas, butane, propane and pentane. The last three are obtained mainly from the liquefaction of coal and the cracking of petroleum.

ADDED COST AND WEIGHT

The cost of converting gasoline-driven vehicles in Europe into gas-driven vehicles varies from $150 to $300 each. A gas machine must have space for the generator unit and also for solid fuel, which means an additional weight of several hundred pounds. This means a corresponding reduction in transport power. On top of this, the vehicles are slow in starting.

There are authentic reports from both Germany and England of the operation of internal combustion engines on creosote. From China comes a report that a Diesel motor bus traveled 2,000 miles on an oil made from peanuts, tea leaves, poppy seed. The bus averaged about eight miles an hour on this fuel.

While synthetic and substitute motor fuels are generally unable to compete on a price basis with gasoline, their advantage may be equalized in a number of ways. Gasoline may be made expensive by the imposition of high import duties, its entry into the country consumption may be limited and its sale further restricted by the imposition of sales taxes. Synthetics obtained from coal and shale are as a rule exempted from excise and other taxes. A further advantage may be had by the granting of Government subsidies.

TRIUMPH BY ALLIES DOUBTED BY EXPERT

Superiority in Numbers Held Impossible, So He Calls for Psychological Attack

By Capt. B. H. LIDDELL HART

North American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.

LONDON, March 30—How are the British people standing the psychological strain of the war? How are the German people standing it? Is there a difference to be found here such as would provide "assurance of victory?" If so, what is the most effective way of developing it? If not, can we find an alternative course that offers any good solution of the war problem?

The attitude of the British people last September was very different from that of August, 1914, showing a spirit of resigned determination that had scarcely a tinge of enthusiasm. Yet the definite outbreak of war was in a sense welcomed by many as a relief from the strain of the "war of nerves" that had preceded it.

When the war came, the tension of uncertainty was removed. People found it easier to brace themselves to meet a definite danger. The common feeling was expressed in such remarks as "Let's get it over"—an instinctive hope which does not take account of the historical fact that countries rarely get over a war in the way they pictured when they got into it.

When the expected danger did not materialize, and the war took a form that only a few had foreseen, the onset of boredom was delayed by the state of perplexity. Repeated speculation as to when and where the war would begin in earnest helped to stave off any sudden psychological slump.

Meanwhile, it was found by many that the war had brought its own compensations for the changes and discomforts it caused. As a war it might seem unexciting, yet by comparison with the tediousness or triviality of their normal existence it gave them a fresh interest in life.

UNQUESTIONING MOOD PERSISTS

The sum of these factors accounts for the comparatively unquestioning mood that persists here after almost seven months of a war that is surrounded by so many obvious question marks. Enthusiasm may be rare, but the majority of the people, in a spirit of mingled resignation and resolution, are as ready to go on with the war as they were to enter it, content to rely on the "assurance of victory" given by their leaders without wondering how it may be achieved.

When we turn to the German side, the general verdict of discerning neutral observers suggests that in the mood prevailing among the German people the similarities are, on the whole, greater than the differences. If there is more discontent among the working classes than here, there is more positive enthusiasm among the Nazi-trained youth of the nation. If there is in general more grumbling than here, it is offset by a habit of obedience.

If they have to bear more discomforts and deprivations than the British people, they are more accustomed to bearing them—and, in comparison, have suffered less by the change from peace to war. If there is, nonetheless, a greater longing for peace among the majority of the population, they do not see how it can come except through their victory. For, beyond the tightness of the Nazi grip upon their necks, they see the war, in its superficial form, as an attack by jealous rivals upon a peace-desiring Germany.

To them the Polish campaign does not appear as an integral part of this war, but as a separate affair, not really Great Britain's concern, which furnished us the excuse for launching an attack upon them. And that impression is deepened by every utterance in Britain and France that breathes a bellicose spirit or suggests that the Allies are aiming to impose another and more drastic peace of Versailles. German home propaganda naturally makes the most of these frequently offered opportunities.

From this comes a fatalistic determination to go on with the war—lest worse befall them. And it is accompanied by an uncritical faith in Chancellor Hitler's "assurance of victory"—a faith which, if it springs from the wish to believe, has a base in his fulfilment of such assurances hitherto.

PSYCHOLOGICAL DEADLOCK

Thus, whatever the differences between the attitudes in which the British and German peoples are facing the war, there is an obvious similarity between its effects on either side. In the psychological sphere, as in the military sphere, the present situation is one of deadlock.

Is there a way of dissolving that deadlock? That is the most pressing problem of the war. For on its solution depends the prospect of achieving the purpose that brought Britain into the war and the chance of avoiding common exhaustion.

When a sober calculation is made of the strength of the opposing forces, and of the way that the fortification of their respective frontiers has multiplied the normal advantage of defense in modern war, there is good reason to conclude that the issue of this war is more likely to depend on a psychological than on a military initiative.

Of all the wars in Europe in which Britain has become engaged during nearly a thousand years only two have ended in a definite victory. These two were the war against Napoleon and the last war with Germany. In each of them we were able to collect allies with whom we finally achieved an overwhelming superiority of numbers over an exhausted foe. Even so, none of our wars has left us so exhausted.

I recently read an article by a celebrated general which argued that the way to win this war was to get one or more of Nazi Germany's neighbors to join us in "a war of liberation, such as that against Napoleon from 1812 to 1814." He did not seem aware that the five strongest Powers in Europe were then arrayed on our side, whereas the only fresh European allies that could be found today are small States, hardly capable of defending themselves.

EXPERIENCE OF WORLD WAR

As for the last war, we had a majority of the great Powers on our side in the first year, unlike today, and only gained the upper hand in the fourth year, after America's weight was thrown into the balance. Examination of that experience led our official history to the conclusion that in a war between foes of similar caliber "numbers approaching 3 to 1 are required to turn the scale decisively."

Such a weighty judgment, delivered in sober reflection, and sponsored by the highest military body in the land, cannot be lightly discounted under the intoxication of the instinctive wish for victory in this new war.

The responsibility now lies on those who decide policy to justify their grounds for disregarding this conclusion—for such disregard is implied in their repeated declarations that our war aim is a decisive victory.

It is easy to see, without an expert eye, that there is no prospect of the required superiority of force on the horizon of this war—and more than a risk of doubling Germany's strength by driving Russia into her arms. In such a situation the Government's "assurance of victory" inevitably recalls Hans Andersen's fairy tale, "The Emperor's New Clothes," which described how certain impostors pretended to weave the Emperor a new suit which, they alleged, had the wonderful property of remaining invisible to every one who was unfit for the office he held. No one dared fail to extol the color and design of a dress that was invisible to them until a little child, with clear-eyed innocence, cried out:

"But the Emperor has nothing at all on"!

There would seem to be need of another clear-eyed "child," innocent of the art of flattery, to call attention to the obvious before this war's procession has gone much farther.

ODDS AGAINST NAZI COLLAPSE

The absence of the odds needed for victory in the field is also, unfortunately, an obstacle to the chances of a moral collapse in Germany or of a revolt against the Nazi regime. There seems to be general agreement among neutral observers that neither of these possibilities can be anticipated unless and until the German forces have suffered a reverse too plain for their propaganda and censorship to conceal. And this view is supported by the general experience that successful uprisings against an authoritarian regime have usually been the sequel to, rather than the cause of, military failure.

On the other hand, a frank recognition of the improbability of victory would be of real advantage in simplifying the problem of how we can best take the initiative in the psychological sphere. It would enable us to drop the threat of attack, which naturally rallies the German people behind Hitler, and to concentrate on showing them that the continuance of a state of war, with all its discomforts and misery, is due to the state of tension and apprehension that their leaders have produced by disregarding other people's rights.

If the German people are haunted by the fear of another and worse Versailles, as many reports imply, there is nothing more likely to harden their resistance than the definite declarations that our war aim is victory, especially when coupled with indefiniteness as to our peace aims. The more intent the Allies appear to attain a military decision that would enable them to impose a peace of their own choosing, the less inclined will the German people be to credit their assertions that they have no vindictive aims—and the stiffer the obstacle they will raise in their own path.

To make victory your primary aim is inevitably a menace—to the other side. The merest common sense should show that, unless it is plain that you can fulfill your threat, it is bound to have an effect contrary to your purpose—consolidating the enemy's troops and people behind their leaders. The real defeatists throughout history have been the men who defeated their country's true purpose by pushing their countrymen to attempt more than was practicable, thereby paving the way to exhaustion, if not to disaster.

A LESSON OF STRATEGY

Where two sides are so evenly matched as offer neither a reasonable chance of early success, the statesman is wise who can take a lesson from the psychology of strategy. It is an elementary principle of strategy that, if you find your opponent in a strong position that would be too costly to assault, you should leave him a line of retreat, as the quickest way of loosening his resistance.

Our statesmen ought, in the first place, to concentrate on hammering into the Germans' minds, by every possible means, the iron logic of the present situation—that they have no more prospect of winning this war than we have, so that both peoples will be losers from its continuance. They are much more likely to see that plain fact if we do not obscure it by cloudy talk of ultimate victory. And once their eyes are opened they are more likely to realize its logical implication—that, as the present occupiers of other people's territory, it lies with them to find an acceptable basis of peace. It will not harm our people's morale to hear that a decisive victory is improbable—it is proverbial that they give their best when they know the worst and nothing braces them like a cold douche. The German people, being always more carefully screened from the truth, are more susceptible to its chilling impact. So if a spreading realization of the futility of seeking victory weakens anybody's resistance, that effect is much more likely to be on their side.

To hasten the process, however, it is important to produce something more than even the strongest of negative arguments. We need a creative idea. Our thought should be directed, without delay, toward evolving a constructive and dynamic peace plan that will have a positive appeal for the mass of the people in the opposing country, as well as in our own. It should go farther than merely to convince them that by peace they can avoid losing what they already enjoy. It should be of a nature that will show them that they have much to gain, individually and collectively, from sharing in such a peace. To that end its design must meet not only the need for national security but the individual's need for economic security.

Nothing would have more promise of curing the German people's inclination to support a policy of aggression, or be a better tonic to our own people.

SPAIN MARKS YEAR OF REHABILITATION

Anniversary of Civil War's End Finds Nation Concentrating On Internal Problems

By T. J. HAMILTON

MADRID—Nationalist Spain celebrates on April 1 the first anniversary of the victorious end of a bitter civil war in which one million lives were sacrificed. A year ago Generalissimo Francisco Franco's armies got possession of the capital, which for two and a half years had withstood their attacks, and on April 1 was issued the final "parte de guerra" announcing that the war was over.

The progress in the work of rebuilding Spain is typified by the difference in the appearance of Madrid itself. The gray, war-ravaged scene of barricades and sand bags is scarcely recognizable twelve months later. A few signs still point the way to air-raid shelters, but the city is settling down to such peace-time problems as jaywalking and traffic congestion; workmen are setting out pansies and turf in the parks; there is even a "paint-up" campaign.

Except that he would have difficulty in getting a Pullman berth on the journey from the frontier and more difficulty in finding a hotel room once he arrived, the visitor would at first see little here to show the horrors which the city underwent. Only when he went to some outlying section, such as University City, would he begin to understand the war's devastation.

EXTENT OF DAMAGE

Some 12,000 buildings were destroyed or seriously damaged in Madrid alone, and the loss of railroad rolling stock, the deterioration of railroads and highways during the war and the disorganization of normal industrial and business life left the Nationalist Government with a serious problem. Moreover, the normal reserves of the country, from farm stock to the surplus raw materials in a Barcelona factory, had been drawn upon to the limit, and there was no gold or foreign exchange available to bring in more from outside.

Much has been accomplished in the face of these difficulties. The food situation admittedly is still giving the government concern, and imported articles of all kinds are to be had at very high prices or not at all. But the important thing is that Spain has averted the business depression which threatened to follow the end of the war, and that slowly but steadily the natural vitality of the nation is asserting itself.

After three years of civil war, in fact, there is no difficulty with sales resistance in Spain. Anybody who can produce anything above all, anybody who can induce the government to let him import something, has a dozen purchasers clamoring at his door. Thanks to the 250,000 bales of cotton obtained on credit from the United States, the Barcelona textile mills are again operating, and the Bilboa mines and iron works, the copper and pyrites workings at Huelva are going full blast.

Over the business and industrial life of Spain the Nationalist regime is exerting a rigorous control unknown in the days of the republic or the monarchy. The main elements of the system, which is modeled on that of Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany, were worked out during the months when the Nationalist zone was largely confined to the agricultural areas of the south and the northwest. Now not a factory can be established or enlarged, not a peseta's worth of goods can be exported or imported, without the approval of the government.

BUSINESS RESTRICTED

Moreover, as not only wages and hours, but the prices of all products are fixed by the government, individualistic Spanish business men are for the first time being required to carry on their affairs in what the government considers the best interests of Spain as a whole.

Two fundamental tenets of the Falange (Spanish Fascist organization) faith are that the available foreign exchange must be released only for vital raw materials and machinery and that Spain must develop its resources so that it produces at home everything humanly possible. This program has been considerably hampered by the outbreak of the European war, virtually cutting off trade with Germany, which had been accounting for half of Nationalist Spain's total foreign trade. However, Spain has concluded various barter agreements with Portugal, Bulgaria, the Scandinavian countries, and Switzerland, France and Britain.

The shortage of food is the principal economic problem remaining today. It is still necessary to ration not merely meat, eggs, butter and other semi-luxury articles but such staples of the poor as olive oil and potatoes. Beginning on March 1, bread also was rationed, and there is no question that the poor have had many hardships.

FRAMEWORK COMPLETED

Except for an evergrowing friendship with Italy, Nationalist Spain a year after its final victory is concentrating on internal affairs. With the law against Masonry and Communism, which compels any one who has ever been affiliated with either to present satisfactory excuses or go to prison, the legal framework of the new State may be said to have been completed. Punishment for Red partisans continues, and both the restoration of the monarchy, and the general amnesty which presumably would accompany it, have been left for the future.

Externally, it is unlikely that there will be much change in the future. The Falange program, with its raised-arm salute, exaltation of the Caudillo (the chief) and the party, and dreams of recovering Spain's one-time greatness, is the official textbook of the government. Recently, however, there have been signs that the moderate conservatives are gaining ground.

The great question that remains to be answered is whether they can bring a return to the non-ideological spirit of the Primo de Rivera dictatorship, or whether the more fiery elements in the Falange will counter-attack and assert the authority of the State and the party still more vigorously over the conservative and other elements.

DEWEY INSISTS ON U.S. ISOLATION IN EUROPE'S WAR, PEACE MOVES

Avers Intervention is Temptation for Administration, Marked With Failures

By GEOFFREY PARSONS Jr.

N.Y. Herald Tribune

MADISON, Wis., March 30—The United States must take no part in any negotiations between the belligerent countries of Europe, either now or after the end of the war, District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey of New York, asserted today as he concluded a two-day circle of Wisconsin cities and towns in his campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination.

Only by adopting a strictly isolationist position, Mr. Dewey said, could the nation preserve its neutrality. Consistently through the last two days the crowds which have turned out to greet Mr. Dewey have given their warmest applause to his statements about staying out of war.

The thirty-eight-year-old New York prosecutor is pitted against Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, in Wisconsin's primary election next Tuesday for control of the state's twenty-four delegates to the Republican National Convention, to be held in Philadelphia next June.

Mr. Dewey said he was impressed with the evidence of strong isolationist sentiment in Wisconsin, and in speeches from the rear platform of his train at stops in western and southern Wisconsin today he emphasized again and again his own isolationist convictions.

"I am convinced," he said, "that the only way this country can remain genuinely neutral is for the government to give all its attention to procuring domestic recovery and to keep its hands wholly out of the European war and out of any negotiations that may take place between warring nations now or at any other day.

GREAT TEMPTATION

"It's a great temptation for any Administration which has achieved only domestic failure to turn its attention to European affairs. That's a principal reason why we must elect a Republican administration, which will give its whole attention to restoring prosperity and will keep completely out of the affairs of Europe.

"The primaries of Wisconsin are a clarion call to people of the state to start the movement to elect a Republican administration which will give its whole attention to our difficult and distressing problems at home."

Mr. Dewey's aids pointed to the statement as a thorough repudiation of the criticism voiced the other day by Representative George Holden Tinkham, of Massachusetts, who said Mr. Dewey was an internationalist whose stand on foreign policy paralleled President Roosevelt's.

Mr. Dewey wound up his Wisconsin tour today in an optimistic, if somewhat questioning frame of mind over the probable outcome of the primary election next week. The confusion was not Mr. Dewey's alone. No politician or Wisconsin newspaperman encountered during the last two days, whatever his personal political affiliations, has claimed to be in a position to predict how the Tuesday primary will go. The crosscurrents of Wisconsin politics are always difficult to discern, and the local people say that the present primary is less susceptible to clear analysis than any in a long time.

The Dewey organizers in Wisconsin advised him that they thought he had a distinct edge over Senator Vandenberg in popular support. The election of delegates, however, is likely to depend in a considerable degree on the personalities of the individual candidates, instead of exclusively on popularity of the Presidential candidates to whom they are pledged. The Vandenberg slate of delegates is held by neutral observers to be made up of stronger vote getters than is the Dewey slate. Some Dewey men suggest that, for this reason, the Wisconsin vote may not give as accurate a picture of the relative strength of Mr. Dewey and Senator Vandenberg as would a straight preferential vote for the two Presidential candidates.

Other uncertain factors are the substantial vote of the LaFollette Progressives, who, if they vote Tuesday, must do so in either the Republican or the Democratic primary, and the so-called stop-Dewey coalition in Wisconsin. To hear the Dewey leaders talk, one would gather that the LaFollette jr. and former Governor Philip LaFollette, and Senator Robert A. Taft, of Ohio are tying up behind the scenes with the Vandenberg supporters. The Senator from Ohio and the La-Follettes, however profess strict neutrality.

It is known that Senator LaFollette was asked for advice on the make-up of the Vandenberg slate, and it is a matter of record that the Vandenberg forces have been waging a strenuous campaign to attract the Progressive vote and have been passing the word around that Senator Taft is their second choice. This is the basis for the talk of a stop-Dewey coalition, even though the effectiveness of the movement at the moment remains unknown.

The Vandenberg campaign managers hoped that a radio speech indorsing their candidate by Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, in Madison tonight would boost the Michigan Senator's changes. Senator Nye, a Middle Western isolationist of somewhat liberal hue, was brought into the state chiefly to lure Progressive support for Senator Vandenberg.

MADE EIGHT SPEECHES

Mr. Dewey made eight rear-platform speeches to sizable crowds today as his campaign train moved through the state from Eau Claire, up near the Minnesota line, down through Madison to the Illinois border. Fifteen hundred persons gathered in the Eau Claire auditorium this morning to hear Mr. Dewey renew his attack on the New Deal.

After his speech Mr. and Mrs. Dewey shook hands with most of the members of the audience, although Mr. Dewey was nursing a bruised third finger of his right hand incurred in the course of the four or five thousand handshakes of his present Middle Western swing through St. Louis, Chicago and Wisconsin.

The size of the crowd in Eau Claire, a city of 40,000, cheered the Dewey party, who had been disturbed by the fact that only 3,500 turned out in Milwaukee last night. Today they blamed the unexpectedly small turnout in Milwaukee on insufficient advance publicity.

At small towns and junction points, such as Fairchild, Merrill, Black River Falls and Camp Douglas, large numbers crowded around the rear end of the train to catch a glimpse of the young Presidential aspirant.

There were five-minute stops at the cities of Elroy and Baraboo, with bigger crowds, and a two-hour layover in the state capital, Madison, where, speaking from the east steps of the State House, Mr. Dewey addressed an audience of 4,000. After a reception in a local hotel, the Dewey party proceeded to Chicago, with the District Attorney making two more train-end speeches in Janesville and Beloit on the way.

DEWEY NAME FILED

N.Y. Herald Tribune

TRENTON, N. J., March 30—The nominating petition placing the name of District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, on the Presidential preference ballot in the New Jersey primary of May 21 was filed here today carrying the signatures of leaders of the rival Republican factions.

Arthur T. Vanderbilt, of Short Hills, a leader of the Clean Government group which is supporting the gubernatorial candidacy of State Senator Robert C. Hendrickson, and former Gov. Harold G. Hoffman, who is opposing Hendrickson, both signed the petition, which carried 624 signatures more than the necessary 1,000.

The Republican State Committee has ruled that the 32 New Jersey delegates will be bound by results of the May 21 preference vote. District Attorney Dewey is the only candidate entered so far. Senator Robert A. Taft, of Ohio, has announced he will not enter. There is no indication that Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, will file.

David H. Wiener, deputy Essex County registrar of deeds and mortgages, who filed the Dewey petition, also filed petitions nominating Mr. Vanderbilt and Joseph A. Bower, of Montclair, as convention delegates from the 12th Congressional District; the Rev. Lester H. Clee, of Newark, and Clayton H. Freeman, of Glen Ridge, from the 10th Congressional District; and Dudley W. Figgis, of South Orange, and Theodora C. Barstow, of Llewellyn Park, from the 11th Congressional District. Mr. Freeman is chairman of the state committee, Mr. Clee was Republican gubernatorial nominee in 1937.

The following were nominated as alternates to this slate of delegates: 12th district, Victor D. Lindeman, of Newark, and E. Prudence Jamouneau, of Irvington; 10th district, Edgar H. Bostock, of Nutley, and Joseph Salimine, of Newark; 11th district, H. Stanley Krusen, of East Orange, and Virginia W. Webb, of Orange.

175 FIRMS TOLD BY U.S. TO SPEED PLANES TO ALLIES

Advised by Johnson of New Army Policy Permitting 'Switching' of Contracts

N.Y. Herald Tribune

WASHINGTON—Louis Johnson, Assistant Secretary of War, has sent letters to 175 representative airplane, engine and accessory manufacturing companies formally advising them of the Administration's newly liberalized policy permitting sale of the latest-type war planes to foreign Governments and authorizing them to negotiate for changes in existing War Department contracts in accord with the relaxed restrictions.

The new policy—which won approval of the House Military Committee Wednesday after Harry H. Woodring, Secretary of War, explained that it would help, not hinder, United States defense because it would further speed expansion of the productive capacity of the American aircraft industry—is expected to result in orders totaling $1,000,000,000 from Britain and France for Army and Navy planes the exportation of which had been barred.

Under the new policy manufacturers can defer deliveries of planes already contracted for by the Army if they obtain consent of the War Department.

It is estimated that some 800 airplanes being built for the Army will be released for purchase by the foreign Governments, and that an even greater number planned for the Army's reserve supply will be available later. In his letter the Assistant Secretary of War explained that the manufacturer would be authorized to begin negotiations with Maj. Gen. H. H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Corps, looking to an "agreement to accept charged orders on existing War Department contracts."

Mr. Johnson said that he did not expect any delay in the working out of the contracts because aircraft manufacturers had expressed a willingness to cooperate. Emphasis was placed on this cooperation also by Army officers and Secretary Woodring in testimony before the House committee.

"We simply want to get it going," said Mr. Johnson. "The Air Corps personnel here and at Wright Field, Ohio, has already studied the matter, and now is ready to talk over the question with the industry."

The new policy has resulted in a Congress move to cut the War Department's appropriations for 1941 by approximately $50,000,000, agreement to trim the bill having been reached by members of the military subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, which expects to report the Army bill next week. President Roosevelt had budgeted it at $683,543,722.

The major reduction is said to be $30,000,000 in the $182,000,000 proposed for the Army Air Corps. Army officers testifying in justification of the proposed release of Army contracts to the Allied purchasing mission had estimated that $27,000,000 could be eliminated from the pending bill.

The decision of the Administration to postpone the Army's goal of 5,500 planes by July, 1941, in favor of the Allied purchase of planes which were intended to form a "reserve" of 1,700 or 2,000 craft, has been approved by Representative J. Buell Snyder, Democrat, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee.

The purchase plan also has led members of the subcommittee to conclude that $16,000,000 to $17,000,000 in "educational" or "sample" orders could be saved as a result of the expansion of plants.

CHIEF FIGURES IN AMERICA'S WAR GAMES AT SEA

Directing the large-scale maneuvers in the Pacific which began on April 2 and which are expected to end soon are Admiral James O. Richardson, Commander-in-Chief of the United States Fleet, flanked by Admiral Charles P. Snyder (left), who is heading the Black Fleet, and Vice-Admiral W. S. Pye (right), heading the opposing White Fleet.

PARIS AND BERLIN: A REVEALING CONTRAST

N.Y. Times Writer, Who Has Visited Both, Tells How They Are Meeting Ordeal of War

By ANNE O'HARE McCORMICK

N.Y. Times

PARIS—At every turn Paris proclaims that it is the capital of a France at war. It is a city girded for battle, prepared for bombardment, ready with every form of succor for expected casualties. In a day here you meet more volunteer workers, hear of more "foyers" for this, that and the other service for soldiers, see more sings of behind-the-front war activity, than you encounter in a month in Berlin.

War is a leveling process and the face of war is singularly alike in all countries, but the first glimpse of Paris after Berlin illuminates the whole difference between two systems of government and two patterns of life. France at war has passed under a form of government control as complete in some respects as that prevailing at all times across the Rhine. Yet in the very aspect of the two capitals it is clear at once that in one the authorities attend to everything and in the other the habit of private enterprise and individual initiative is too strong to be smothered even under the iron mask of war.

One immediately feels the contrast between the mass formation of Germany and the one-by-one march of France. Whether the self-regulated will win proportionate victories over the ordered mass when the opposing forces are multiplied by thousands is not only the supreme question of the war but its main issue. Daily it becomes plainer that the struggle in Europe is the Apocalypse of the long drawn-out fight of man to control the machine. For at its apogee the machine is a war machine, and Hitler is only that machine made flesh, utterly careless of the individual and especially contemptuous of that private monopoly of himself and the use of his own mind which the Fernchman guards with peculiar obstinacy.

2 OTHER CONTRASTS

Two other contrasts between Berlin and Paris immediately hit the eye. Paris is not only the capital of France at war. It is the Allied war capital, the military center for both nations as obviously as London is the political center.

The animation of the city this week is partly due to the crowds of visitors who have crossed the Channel to spend the Easter holidays with British officers and men on leave from the front. The mingling of uniforms, the mixture of languages, the movement in the streets, the throngs in the cafes and theaters, create an atmosphere of gayety and vivacity belying the sandbags, the shuttered shops, the "abris" against air raids, the grim provisions on every side for the "defense passive."

They assure France that she is not alone. The fraternization of the French and British betokens an interdependence never felt in the last war. Even the gnarled old lady renting chairs in the Bois knows that it takes the armies and air fleets of both countries to match the German. "We must hang together or separately," she says, defining Allied policy in a phrase she thinks she has invented.

But French animation is also a form of courage. The French give the Germans credit for all the strength they possess. Perhaps they overrate the German war machine; who knows? And the Germans do not belittle the military prowess of the French, but whereas they keep their misgivings to themselves and trust that the vast reserves the Nazis describe are not, as some suspect, "Potemkin villages," he French talk about their deficiencies.

No war enthusiasms can be worked up among either people, but the Germans cannot really believe the worst will happen and the French think it can. They face open-eyed the horrors that may lie before them, profoundly pessimistic of the future yet determined to maintain a brave front and enjoy to the last minute the small pleasures of normal life—white bread, conversation, budding trees, a cafe on the terrasse in the first sunshine. France rises magnificently to emergencies, and this applies particularly to the women and the hard-eyed, tight-fisted peasants, above all to the peasants plowing this year the fields they have already seen devastated. "Will they come this way again?" they ask casually.

BERLIN SILENT

Berlin is strangely silent. Unter den Linden is a deserted thoroughfare compared to the Champs Elysees. Few restrictions on the use of petrol are imposed in France. Private automobiles and taxis dash around corners in almost the usual number and confusion.

In Berlin motor traffic is reduced to the minimum. Except for the buses burning synthetic oil, and laden trucks linked together in twos and threes to save fuel, the streets are empty. The people hurrying along the sidewalks seldom speak. They are all so preoccupied that even in company they seem to be walking alone. At night the silence deepens. To drive in the streets in the blackout is like driving through a dark country lane. The buildings are completely blotted out and no sound issues from the invisible doors and winows. Groping along the tunnellike streets you almost never hear a voice. Other gropers are shadows and footsteps.

Even the big shops, crowded though they are with people hunting for something to buy, are very quiet. Departments offering millinery, jewelry, novelties, silk and luxury goods are well stocked; others are sold out. Wearing apparel is marked with the price in marks and "points" and customers are more interested in the number of points the article will subtract from their hundred-point ration cards than in its cost in money.

In Paris there is plenty of noise and enough light at night to make circulation easy. Street lamps are only turned down, many doors are illuminated and curtains are carelessly drawn over the windows. There is no rationing system and apparently no shortage of goods. Food restrictions are applied by the simple device of prohibiting the sale of certain goods on certain days. There are three days without meat, other days without pastry, alcohol, sweets.

The Germans are shut up with themselves. They have no allies with whom to fraternize. The Axis never made for comradeship and the Soviet pact induces no influx of Russians in Berlin. Today Germany is almost as completely cut off from the world as Russia is. Behind the Westwall she has had her own way with most of the neighboring peoples, but in all his coups de force or diplomacy Hitler has not made a single friend for his country. Germany fights her war alone, and this isolation produces an atmosphere as different from that of France as the air in a sealed room from that of a breeze-swept field.

WEARINESS IN BOTH

War weariness exists in both countries, but in France it is due to inaction and in Germany to letdown after the strain of too much action. For seven years now the Germans have been keyed up, on the march and geared for war. The call to the supreme effort finds them near the limit of their energy and their endurance.

This is not so true of the soldiers as of the civilian forces. "I've had a good rest and good grub at the front," a young mechanic told his family when they commented on his impoved appearance. But in the factories and on the farms production lags and neither incentive nor punishment succeeds in galvanizing these second-line fighters to work harder. They are tired. The women are tired of making the most of little. In some parts of the country the children are said to be tired. The teachers in the schools have difficulty in interesting them in "Mein Kampf" and any kind of Nazi doctrnie.

One gets the impression that the National Socialist revolution is petering out, into something more radical on one side, into boredom and disillusion on the other. If it were not for the war, this tendency might show up more clearly. But the war has forged a bond between Nazis and anti-Nazis. Convinced by incessant propaganda that Britain seeks to crush Germany, they have all become Germans fighting for their country. The people desire peace even more than do the French, but the majority believe firmly that if a grand-scale war is inevitable a German victory is certain. Over and over again one hears the refrain: "It will be all over by August and our troubles will be ended."

In France nobody is predicting the duration of this struggle. The French have no doubt that in the end their side will win and no illusions that the battle will be short or easy. In Germany the aim of the government seems to be to divert popular attention from the thought of danger. Up to the present there has been no real alarm that Berlin will be bombed. Here the government appears to be trying to convince the people that the war is real and and the danger ever-present. The French believe it, but they refuse to act frightened.

And if the Germans have lost the energy to work at top speed, the French have lost the energy to hate. The strangest thing about this war is that it fails to arouse passion or excitement on either side. Berlin goes heavily and somberly toward an unknown destination The temper and aspect of Paris are lighter, but not its mood. The Germans see nothing in their blackout and the French in their half-light see too far.

Rumanian Oil Barges Leave For Germany

United Press

BUCHAREST, April 17—Four barges embarked yesterday with 2,800 tons of oil destined for Germany after flood waters had receded in the port of Giurgiu.

Four or five more barges were to leave the port last night, each carrying a cargo of 700 tons of oil.

Meanwhile, it was learned here that the Rumanian Government did not compel Rumanian oil companies to sell their produce to Germany against their will and that as a result it had been difficult for Germany to buy her quota on the local market.

It was understood that all state royalties would now be sold to Germany. Otherwise the Government would be powerless to supply Germany with the promised quota. State royalties amount to 700,000 tons of crude oil annually, 24 per cent of which comes out of the refinery as benzine, 10 per cent as kerosene, 15 per cent as gasoline and the rest as fuel oil.

To meet Germany's immediate needs, big companies reported they were requested by the Government to sell the Government all crude oil bought since last October.

French Planes Over China

United Press

PARIS, April, 20—Air France has signed an agreement with the Chinese National Government at Chungking providing the company the right to fly over Chinese territory, in view of the pending establishment of a new air line from Yunnanfu to Hanoi and Hongkong, it was learned here last night.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - by Ripley

U.S. VOTERS STILL STRONGLY FAVOR ALLIES, SURVEY BY GALLUP INSTITUTE INDICATES

American sentiment remains overwhelmingly behind the Allies after seven months of war in Europe, it wass revealed in a nationwide survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion, made public on March 30. Periodical check-ups have shown virtually no change in feeling in the United States since the hostilities began, according to Dr. George Gallup, director of the institute.

His report said that although 84 per cent of those questioned wish for an Allied victory, the small group favoring Germany has been reduced from 2 per cent to 1 per cent, with a corresponding gain in that section of the eleotorate which considers itself completely neutral. The survey continued:

"In its two tests of the American public's sympathies the institute put the identical question to corresponding cross-sections of the voters in each of the forty-eight States:

" 'Which side do you want to see win the present war—England and France or Germany?'

"The results of these identical surveys are shown below:

	Mar. 30	6 Months Ago
Want Allies to win..	84%	84%
Want Germany to win	1	2
'Completely neutral,' no choice or no opinion	15	14

FEELINGS ARE INTENSIFIED

"But if few voters have changed sides since the war began, there have nevertheless been important changes in the intensity with which Americans have come to regard the Allied and German causes.

"Asked, 'Do you feel more sympathetic or less sympathetic toward that side today than you did when the war began?' one voter in very six (17 per cent) says that he is less sympathetic to England and France than he was.

"In this connection few mention the British blockade, the stoppage of American mails or the sharp curtailment of British tobacco purchases in the United States. Instead they comment that 'I'm beginning to feel the Allies are nearly as much to blame as Germany,' that 'the Allies aren't doing all they could to win the war,' or that 'they didn't do enough for Finland.'

"Significantly, too, most frequent criticisms of the Allies on these grounds come from younger citizens—persons between the ages of 21 and 30.

"But for every person who feels less sympathetic toward the Allies today, nearly two persons say they feel 'more sympathetic,' so that England and France have been the net gainers in the tug-of-war for American support. The increasing intensity of pro-Ally sentiment is accounted for by three main factors, the comments show:

"(1) The war is apparently not going as well as expected for England and France. (2) increasing dislike for Germany's tactics in the war and her rule of conquered Polish territories, and (3) a growing belief that England and France are fighting for a principle that is important to America.

"The actual vote of those favoring England and France is as follows:

More sympathetic	28%
Less sympathetic	17%
Just the same	55%

CROMWELL'S SPEECH RECALLED

"In its general sympathies for the Allies side, American public opinion obviously supports much of what United States Minister to Canada James H. R. Cromwell told an Ottawa audience a fortnight ago in a speech that drew a blunt public rebuke from Secretary of State Cordell Hull. What a majority of American voters would not agree with, however, was the suggestion which many observers thought they saw in Mr. Cromwell's speech that the United States should enter the war on the Allied side.

"All institute tests on this subject since the war began have shown only a small minority of United States voters in favor of repeating our World War role this time. In the institute's most recent survey on the question, less than 4 per cent of those interviewed said they would approve 'declaring war on Germany and sending an army and navy abroad to fight.'

"If the Allies should appear to be losing, 55 per cent in a recent survey said they would favor lending them money, but only 23 per cent said they would be in favor in entering the war and sending troops in such a case."

EDISON OPPOSES 2-OCEAN NAVY PLAN AS UNWISE

Secretary, on Coast, Says Strategy Demands One Fleet With Many Bases

N.Y. Herald Tribune

LOS ANGELES, March 30.—Charles Edison, Secretary of the Navy, said today he was opposed to the "two-ocean navy" plan advocated by some members of Congress because every sound strategical conclusion demands the maintenance of the fleet as a single coordinated unit in the Pacific."

"I think the idea of building a separate fleet for the Atlantic is not only unnecessary, but altogether too costly even to consider," said Mr. Edison in an interview. "We are now adding to the fleet by steady increases in essential types and the proposal to build up to the present fleet by 10 per cent seems sound to me.

"It should be realized that it would take more than ten years to duplicate the present United States Fleet even if it was sound to do so.

"Our strategic situation and the presence of the Panama Canal make thoroughly sound our present policy of concentrating the fleet out here, so constituted that it could be immediately shifted to any threatened area in either ocean. I can see nothing in the observable future that should occasion its transfer from present operating areas."

He said drydocks of sufficient size to lift and repair the Navy's largest battleships should be located at every Pacific port where there is sufficient harbor to accommodate them.

"We have learned from this war the need of numerous bases, rather than concentrating huge base facilities in one or two areas. The air menace already developed in this war has shown us the soundness of this policy."

The Secretary denied statements recently carried in Japanese newspapers that the forthcoming war maneuvers were a threat to Japan.

MICHIGAN RETAINS U.S. COLLEGIATE SWIM TITLE

Wolverines Nose Out Yale, 45-42 By Taking Last Event, 400-Yard Relay

By JESSE ABRAMSON

N.Y. Herald Tribune

NEW HAVEN, Conn., March 30—In a tumultous finish, Michigan's 400-yard free style relay foursome smashed all listed records with a 3:31 clocking, defeated Yale by a two-foot margin and retained the team championship over Yale, 45 to 42, in the seventeenth annual that ended in Payne Whitney Pool tonight.

The outcome of the meet hinged on the relay, with unbeaten and invincible Michigan and the record-breaking Yale quartet head and shoulders above the rest of the field. The Wolverines came up to the eleventh and final event of the two-day program leading Yale, 35 to 34, although Ohio State was out in front with 39 points. But the Buckeyes had no team in the relay final and was merely an innocent bystander as the champions of the West fought the champions of the East for the team title, which Michigan alone had won since team scoring was instituted in 1937. Michigan had that one-point lead, thanks to a bantam sophomore named Strother (Teabone) Martin, who placed third in the three-meter springboard dive.

YALE'S STRONG BID FAILS

It was Dick Kelly, Ed Pope, Russ Duncan and Howie Johnson for Yale; all of them sophomores save Duncan, the captain, against Michigan's Ed Hutchens, John Gillis, Charley Barker and Gus Sharemet. Hutchens and Barker had been shut out in their specialties, the 220 and 100, respectively. But now they came through for Michigan like champions, snatching the team title on which Yale seemed to take a solid grip when it earned nine qualifying places to Michigan's six in this afternoon's trials. The two teams started the day deadlocked at 23 points.

Pope, on the second leg, opened a margin of seven feet over the Michigan pursuer. But Barker got it all back and sent the great Gus Sharemet off a split second behind Johnson. Sharemet had won the 100-yard free style crown earlier in the evening with a 51.8 second century, fastest of the year. Now the big sophomore, hailed as another Weissmuller, reeled off a 51-second century from his flying start, unofficially equaling the world record. His powerful strokes gave him command over Johnson all the way despite the fact that he hit the lane rope and was caught ten yards from home. He recovered quickly and drove on to victory.

WORLD RECORD BROKEN

Michigan's 3:31 eclipsed the world and American record of 3:31.6 made by the New York A. C., anchored by Peter Fick, in 1939, and wiped out the national intercollegiate record of 3:32.2 made by Michigan and Ohio State in 1937 and 1938, and the N. C. A. A. championship record of 3:32.2 made by Michigan three years ago. Yale, of course, was under all these records, too. The same Yale team that was beaten tonight, however, set a record of 3:30.7 here earlier in the season.

The splits on the Michigan team were 54.4, 53.8, 51.8 and 51 flat; for Yale, 54.8, 52.2, 52.9 and 52 flt.

Michigan took both heavily-rewarded relays in the meet, with Gus Sharemet anchoring both, and winning the 100 as well. Ohio State, winning four titles, two today, placed third with 39 points. Wayne University, with two titles, was fourth with 25 points and Princeton was fifth with 20, Harvard sixth with 12 and the rest of the field distanced.

SHAREMET WINS SPRINT

The Johnny Weissmuller of the college sprinters today won the 100-yard free style crown in the year's fastest century, 51.8 seconds.

He is Constantine Sharemet, Gus for short, a Russian out of the Hamtramck region of Detroit (that also boasts Joe Louis), and one of the sophomore brothers Sharemet of the University of Michigan.

Gus Sharemet, an eighteen-year-old giant of six feet one inch and 185 pounds, is a laughing water boy who can be very lazy until the chips are down. He has a long easy stroke, backed by power, rythym, style and speed. Getting away to a fine start as Ed Kennedy bangéd the pistol, the aquatic Wolverine snatched the lead when he came up for air and never gave it up in thrashing the four lengths of the pool.

He won by a decisive two-foot margin, withstanding the swirling finish of Paul Wolf, of Southern California, co-winner of the title in 52.9 seconds at Ann Arbor last year.

Wolf himself held off Howie Johnson, Yale sophomore, winner of the 220 last night, who also made a speedboat finish for a close third. Guy Lumsden, of Wayne, the 50-yard winner last night, was fourth and Kob Schaper, of Brown, the New England champion, fifth in a blanket finish.

Yale's other sophomore, Ed Pope, finished sixth and last, out of the points, after swimming his fastest century, 52.6, in the afternoon to qualify, but he had done his good deed for Yale by shutting Charles Barker, of Michigan, the co-winner last year, out of the final.

The winning time last year was 52.9. Today all six finalists had to do 52.8 or better to qualify, Sharemet and Johnson leading with 52.2 in the heats. Barker did 53 flat and was shut out.

The 100-yard race started the final session with a bang as Michigan, the three-year defending champion, and Yale entered the final five events deadlocked at 23 points. As a result of the 100, the Wolverines moved out ahead, 29 to 26.

Sharemet's time, faster than his previous best, 52.1, Big Ten record, came within one-fifth of a second of the national intercollegiate record of 51.6 that Walter Spence, of Rutgers, established in 1934.

Michigan retained its three-point lead over Yale in the 200-yard breast stroke final as both came up with three poinst. John Meyer, Eli sophomore, placed a strong third, and John Haigh and John Sharemet were fourth and fifth for Michigan as the latter nailed Ed Gesner, of Yale, in the last butterfly storke.

HIGGINS WINS BREAST STROKE

The winner of the breast stroke turned up in John Higgins, Ohio State veteran, who whipped up a furious sprint in the last ten yards for a one-foot victory over Ned Parke, Princeton sophomore, th Eastern champion. Higgins, clocked in 2 minutes 23.7 seconds, turned in the fastest varsity race of the season. The Olympian led for half the distance, then Parke, butterflying all the way, wrested the lead from him as Higgins went into the orthodox or old-style stroke. Parke led by four feet at 150, but Higgins came on again when he resumed the faster butterfly.

Rene Chouteau, the Yale sophomore from St. Louis who learned his swimming in the Mississippi and never swam in a pool until he came to Yale, put the Eli in front by taking a smashing second in the 440-yard free style. Andy Clark, of Wayne University, Detroit, the national A.A.U. medley champion, taking the lead at 175 yards and opening a margin of three yards on the field, saved three feet of it before the thrilling finish of Chouteau. The Eli youngster, back in fifth place at 250 yards, closed in lap by lap from then on, and the Yale rooters in the arena went wild at the prospect that he might overhaul Clark. But the latter, a fine competitor, dug in and held the title.

YALE TAKES ONE-POINT LEAD

Michigan had no finalists in this, so Yale moved to the front, 33 to 32, with Ohio State third at 29 points as John Patton and Harold Stanhope, the 1,500-meter winner yesterday, placed fourth and fifth. Eric Cutler, of Harvard, after fighting Clark for the lead most of the way, faded to third at the end, beaten eight feet by Chouteau.

Clark's time of 4 minutes 50 seconds also was the best American performance of the season.

Gordon Mustin, Yale senior, who swam his fastest race, 4:58, in qualifying for the final, placed sixth, out of the points. Yale's predominance in qualifiers over Michigan, nine to six, was dissipated in the finals as three of the Blue's qualifiers failed to score. The Wolverines were fighting for their title like champions.

CLARK BEATS PATNIK IN DRIVE

Al Patnik, Ohio State's baby-faced senior, undefeated in championship competition since he won both national A.A.U. diving titles here as a freshman, was beaten in his varsity farewell when he lost the three-meter springboard test to his junior team mate, Earl Clark. Getting a perfect score of tens with a full twisting one-and-a-half somersault in his final dive, Clark emerged the winner over Patnik, 166.82 to 165.76 points. Patnik had won the one-meter dive last night, with Clark second. Patnik then received the coaches' award as the outstanding swimmer of the year. Teabone Martin, who can't dive from the low board, gave Michigan a boost to the team title by getting third, as Yale's two finalists finished with only one point.

U.S. CAMPAIGN ISSUES STUDIED

Main Issues Formulated In Presidential Contest; Methods, Policies Seen

By TURNER CATLEDGE

N.Y. Times

WASHINGTON—The report of the Republican Program Committee, headed by Dr. Glenn Frank, former president of the University of Wisconsin, obviously was intended to set up a chart of issues on which the Presidential and Congressional elections of 1940 might turn. How far it accomplished that end is yet to be fully disclosed, but from the report and first reactions to it, it is clear even now that this year's national political fight, as in 1936, will be waged much less over broad principles than over governmental management of policies already established.

In this regard the so-called Frank report confirmed a situation which had been indicated rather eloquently by the pre-convention Republican candidates themselves, to wit: That, with perhaps a few exceptions, the party has no thought of countering the basic purposes of the New Deal but rather to ask a mandate for change in some of the methods and personnel by which it has striven toward those purposes in the last few years.

In the matters of human relief, labor relations, social security, international affairs, national defense, farm aid and the like, the issues suggested by the Frank program, as well as by the Republican Presidential candidates, are largely questions of method and management.

STAND FOR ECONOMIES

Even on the subject of fiscal policy, where the division seems to run deepest, it is difficult to stretch the issue into the proportions of a principle, for regardless of President Roosevelt's frequent glorification of the policy of "spending to save," the current position of the Democratic high command is outwardly toward economies.

And on such a Republican subject as tariff-making the Republican's nominees like it or not, they must stand, at least publicly, on the record which bears their party's label.

Under these circumstances, and considering certain specific manifestations, one of the chief campaign issues will be the fiscal policies of the Roosevelt administration. It is recognized by the New Dealers themselves that one of their most vulnerable spots is the deficit spending of the last few years. They can get no satisfying comfort, moreover, from the fact that so many people, high and low, might have benefited personally from these unusual expenditures.

They know that some of the chief beneficiaries are among those clamoring for more orthodox government finances. They are aware, too, that the fiscal question is taking greater hold in the country at large, and well do they remember the emotional campaign made on the same subject, and on the same side now espoused by the Republicans, by Mr. Roosevelt back in 1932.

PROBLEM OF THE NLRA

Another issue high on the list is the Roosevelt Administration's record in the matter of labor relations. No one expects the Republicans to go so far as to advocate repeal of the National Labor Relations Act. The authority and propriety of the Federal Government in safeguarding the right of collective bargaining, although strictly New Dealish in its concept, is not to be questioned. But the methods and men by which and by whom the safeguarding has been attempted will certainly be brought into the controversial side of the campaign.

The question of relief must of necessity be an issue in some degree, but here again no one is seriously going to advocate discontinuance of the Federal Government's responsibilities in this regard.

WOMEN OF JAPAN 'REBEL' AT TEXTILE

Staple Fiber of Sufu Clothes Insisted on by Government Lack Staying Quality

Editor's note: The following might have been one of the last stories written by the late Frank H. Hedges, well-known American newspaperman who died in Toky on April 10, reprinted from The New York Times.

N. American Newspaper Alliance, Inc.

TOKYO—A "peaceful rebellion," resulting from the war in China, is under way in Japan and is led by the women of the country. Their rebellion—and they find plenty of male supporters—is against the government's enforcement of the use of staple fiber as a substitute for wool and cotton in clothing and other articles.

The only demonstration so far followed a meeting of feminine leaders who had gathered in Tokyo to discuss the problem. Each participant brought with her several staple fiber garments that had not been able to stand the gaff of daily wear or the washtub. So excited did they become that, at the close of the meeting, they grabbed up these clothes, that had become mere rags, and flung them wildly about. Now it looks as if the women might ultimately win with their battle.

Staple fiber in English, sufu in Japanese (an abbreviation of the first syllable of each English word as pronounced by Japanese tongues) is a "purely Japanese invention" resembling rayon and made of pulp.

Because it was Japan-made, it roused fervent and patriotic enthusiasm when first put on the market. Moreover, the government thought it perceived a way out of importing great quantities of wool and cotton, primarily from Australia and the southern States of the United States, which constituted a serious drain on Japan's rapidly dwindling gold reserve.

Pure sufu had not sufficient durability to be used alone, and so orders were issued that it be mixed with either cotton or wool in the making of stockings, overcoats and all other articles of clothing. The price was high, but still it could be paid in yen and so save gold for the buying of American steel and oil, munitions from many lands and other of the sinews of war needed by Japan's armies in China.

Then it was found that after one or two wearings, interspersed by trips to the laundry, these sufu clothes were mere rags and tatters. Sufu stockings would not hold their shape for more than a couple of hours after having been donned. The man wearing a sufu suit and caught in the rain reached home with the cuffs of his coat sleeves at his elbows and his trousers only reaching his knees. The child covered with several sufu blankets shivered all night long, awaking in the morning with a cold or worse.

Coupled with the general rise in prices, now more than one-third up since the beginning of hostilities in China three years ago, the situation steadily became more unendurable. Whereas three years ago rent and clothing took 30 to 34 per cent of the monthly income of the ordinary wage or salary earner, these items now demand about 67 per cent.

Added to this, the progressively growing shortage of labor and electric power is bringing about an automatic curtailment of the production of sufu and other substitute materials, with subsequent price jumps and much dealing on the "black market" which has come into existence because of the arbitrary fixing of many prices by the government in a vain attempt to combat the mounting cost of living.

So active is this "black market" that police records show 200,918 violations of the price-control law in the last seventeen months in Tokyo alone. Price tags on goods always conform to the law, of course, but frequently 50 per cent or even more has to be added before a reluctant merchant will part with any of his stock to an eager but angry and indignant buyer. Such deals are always in cash.

As things have gone from bad to worse, the women of the empire, supported and encouraged by their men-folk, have begun to take matters into their own hands and demand that more cotton and wool be imported, relegating sufu into the background. The metropolitan and provincial press is solidly behind the campaign; and the situation has obtruded itself into the Diet debates. It is a weeapon for attack on the government by an Opposition member, for he realizes that it will prove a No. 1 vote-getter in the next general election.

One of the two women members of the Price Policy Commission is the standard bearer in the "rebellion" against sufu. She has her personal reasons as well as the public welfare at heart. Recently, she says, she bought a pair of sandals for her granddaughter, who slipped her toes between the thongs and rushed to the street to show her playmates. Scarcely had the child reached the sidewalk before the sufu thong of one sandal snapped and she was thrown to the ground, skinning her face badly and twisting her knee.

Durability of sufu is but one-tenth to one-fifteenth that of ordinary cotton goods, says the Tokyo Chugai, a daily concentrating on business and finance. It notes this increases the cost of living by 10 to 15 per cent every time a sufu article is purchased.

MACKENZIE KING, WAR LEADER OF CANADA

For Many Years a Leading Figure in Public Life, He Wins a Mandate to Drive Ahead

By FREDERICK T. BIRCHALL

N.Y. Times

OTTAWA—In the quiet of Laurier House, his beautiful residence in Ottawa, the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada, spent the day after the recent election contemplating the outstanding triumph of his political career and planning his course now that he had achieved it. He received few visitors, although many clamored to see him. Apparently he wanted to think, for there was much to think about.

There was, for instance, the unprecedented victory he had just won, and the unprecedented strategy which had brought it to him. In his campaign for return to office he had made four speeches and six broadcasts. Except for these, during the two months of appeal to the electorate he had kept close to his desk dealing with the daily routine of administration and letting his Ministers do the talking.

Ten speeches setting forth the government's case, and, for the rest, an implied demand that the country reach its own verdict! It was as definite a breach of the accepted conventions of political campaigning as Mr. King's bold stroke of suddenly dissolving parliament had been the negation of his own previous tradition of cautious strategy. This time with a lightning challenge, he had caught his opponents off guard, cut off their ammunition and confined their attacks to criticism of that move for which they had provided him with an adequate defense. They had nothing to talk about.

It was a new King precedent, and the new method of campaigning that followed it, a comparative taciturnity wholly unlike the ardent, somewhat overloquacious leader of former days, completed the bewilderment.

LARGEST FOLLOWING

And the result: the largest following that any Prime Minister has ever brought to the Canadian House of Commons; a completely victorious bench of Ministers; a clear government majority from eight Provinces and a possible tie if not an ultimate victory when the soldier vote is counted from ninth; a solid Quebec for the second time since confederation; a record in electoral strength, almost incredible majorities for individual government candidates and complete refutation after four years in office of the legend that governments begin to die from the date of their birth.

It may not have been this retrospect alone which engrossed Mr. Mackenzie King's thoughts on that Wednesday after election, though it well might have been. He may have thought of the prospect ahead, which is none too roseate, because the very unwieldiness of his victory will add problems of party management to the stern difficulties of government and war. He may have wondered if at 65 the strenuous life he has chosen was worth while.

Strangely enough, at a time when the Canadian Premiership holds more prospect of strain and tribulation than it ever has done, Mr. King has seemed to seek it with more determination than he ever has done before. He has sought it on his own terms, it is true, for throughout the campaign he stressed the necessity of his being returned to office with an outright majority, otherwise government in time of war would be impossible.

But it was not always thus. He was eager enough in 1921, when he first received a mandate to form a government, but he was scarcely so happy during the next four years under the perpetual stress and compromise imposed on him by the Progressives, whose support was necessary to carry on. Again in 1930 he met with comparative philosophy the crushing defeat that came to him in that year, and some of his associates are authority for the statement that in the campaign of 1935 he weighed very carefully the burdens against the rewards of office and found the prospect not wholly alluring.

TAKES UP CHALLENGE

This time, however, there was a definite challenge of his integrity and he hastened to take it up. Also there was more, for there is the goal of a great place in Canadian history in prospect for him. Mr. King has now spent nearly thirteen years as Canadian Prime Minister. If his next government carries on for the full five years allotted by the Constitution, he will have been in office eighteen years, only one year less than the record of Sir John A. Macdonald and three years longer than the veteran Sir Wilfred Laurier, the Liberal leader whom he succeeded.

More than that, Laurier and Macdonald ruled in relatively peaceful times. Mackenzie King will have led his country through post-war collapse, through boom, depression and through war again—all on the grand scale. This Premiership will be the apex of a historic career. Thrice Premier and for more than thirty years one of the dominant figures in Canadian public life.

Contemplating the sturdy figure whose stockiness detracts from its really considerable height, one senses its appeal to a people inherently practical and self-reliant. There is nothing spectacular about Prime Minister Mackenzie King. Moreover, in any intelligent appraisal of him, it is soon realized that the last thing he desires is to be spectacular. His specialty is keeping the national machinery running smoothly and getting things done. He is in some degree an economist and able analyst of social conditions. But most of all he is an able negotiator, a reconciler of diverse opinions, a carefull traveler along the middle path.

Politics is in his blood, for his maternal grandfather, for whom he was named, was William Lyon Mackenzie, a Scottish journalist and politician who played some part in obtaining parliamentary government for Canada in early colonial days. He himself is the son of a law lecturer of Toronto University, but he has also studied at Harvard, where he was protege of President Charles W. Eliot and won a fellowship in political science and a traveling fellowship which enabled him to study European social and economic conditions. He also spent some time on social work at Hull House in Chicago under the auspices of Jane Addams and for a further period was a reporter on The Toronto Globe.

HAD HIGHLY ADVANCED IDEAS

In his youth he held what were then regarded as highly advanced ideas on social and economic problems, largely as a result of these contacts. There were those who described him as a dangerous radical with revolutionary notions about the rights of labor. But the radicalism of those days has become almost the conservatism of this new era. Perhaps experience in practical administration has also mellowed the youthful King's early fervors. At any rate nobody thinks of him as a radical any longer.

By predilection and training he has evolved into a Liberal of the Gladstonian school—if such a type is conceivable as still existing in modern politics. He believes in paliamentary government and the democratic sytem, in preservation of individual liberty, in reasonable fair play being given to the laws of supply and demand, and in the maximum amount of trade between nations as a safeguard of peace and stability. He dislikes socialism, communism and fascism equally, regarding them as alike alien to the Anglo-Saxon spirit and destructive to the democratic system.

Mr. King entered Canadian public life as Deputy Minister of Labor just 40 years ago, when the Laurier government at Ottawa first established that Ministry, but a civil service career did not appeal to him, so he succeeded in winning a seat in Parliament. There he was soon Minister of Labor, but went down to defeat in the reciprocity election of 1911. While out of office he spent four years in investigating labor conditions in the United States for the Rockefeller Foundation.

But politics most appealed to him, and, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier died in 1919, the Liberal National Convention chose him as a new leader. Two years later he brought his party to power and himself to the Premiership. With the exception of a brief inter-regnum in 1926, and five years in the wilderness following the debacle of 1930, he has held that office since.

His chief interest in these later days is in Canada's relations with the rest of the world. He has always kept the Department of External Affairs (the Canadian Foreign Office) in his own hands, and it is there that his influence is most visible. He has his own outlook and it is essentially North American and nationalistic.

Mr. King believes in maintaining the British connection for Canada, but he has also fought persistently the proprietorial proclivities of British imperialists. He played a large part in shaping the cause of the Imperial Conference of 1926, which registered the emancipation of the Dominion from the control of Downing Street. He has maintained that Canada's ties with Great Britain are not incompatible with cultivating the closest relations with the United States and that such relations are in the best interests not only of Canada but the British Commonwealth.

To him Canada may well be the heart of empire and at the same time the best and closest friend the United States has. He believes that the world will be safer and better for the maintenance of both links, and, indeed it may be that the time is at hand when that view will become of importance in world settlement.

IS BACHELOR

In Government he interferes only in crucial matters. He gives his Ministers a free hand, counting himself as the leader of a team, and they like him for it. As for himself personally, politics and Government are his life and he has no other interests. Sport in any phase interests him not at all and society bores him. He is a bachelor and has few intimate friends. As much of his time as possible he spends at Kingsmere, his lovely country home in the Gatineau Hills, where he has transformed a great stretch of woodland into an English park.

It is there that Mackenzie King will seek to solve the great problems of wartime that will face Canada this Summer.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - by Ripley

VATICAN MOVE IS EXPLAINED BY ROOSEVELT

Does Not Constitute Opening Of Formal Diplomatic Relations With Papal Government

Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK—Reaffirmation that the appointment of Myron C. Taylor as special envoy to the Vatican "does not constitute the inauguration of formal diplomatic relations with the Vatican" has been given by President Roosevelt in a letter to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

The President in his letter stressed that the description of Mr. Taylor as having "the rank of ambassador" was used to indicate that, for the purposes of social rating, Mr. Taylor had a rank "corresponding to ambassador."

IN RESPONSE TO INQUIRY

The letter, dated March 14, was sent in reply to an inquiry made by Dr. George A. Buttrick, President of the Federal Council of Churches, in which Dr. Buttrick had asked the President to state publicly that the interpretation made by a Vatican jurist on February 13, was contrary to the President's understanding. The Council's Executive Committee on January 26 had warned that if the appointment should prove a stepping-stone to diplomatic relationships, the Council would feel obliged to oppose it strongly.

"Mr. Taylor was sent to Rome to assist parallel endeavors for peace and the alleviation of suffering," the President wrote, adding, "I am sure that all men of good will, must sympathize with this purpose."

In making public the personal and official assurance of President Roosevelt, the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches, made the followng comment:

"This assurance does not cover the entire ground of our apprehension. The unwarranted interpretation of the appointment to which Dr. Buttrick's letter called attention has not been explicitly denied."

DISPATCH CAUSES CONCERN

This refers to a news dispatch from Rome reporting that the Vatican, after studying the status of Mr. Taylor, had decided that he will be "just as much an ambasador to the Holy See as the representatives of other nations" and that he "could remain accredited to the Holy See even after Mr. Roosevelt ceased to be President."

The Executive Committee's statement concludes with:

"We reiterate our declaration and reaffirm our eagerness to join with men of all faiths in endeavors for world peace. We also declare again our unswerving adherence to the historic American principle of the separation of Church and State."

AMERICA HEARS PLEA TO CRUSH POWER POLITICS

Delegates to Philadelphia Conference Urged to Mass Forces Behind World Group

Christian Science Monitor

PHIDADELPHIA—A call for mobilization of the spiritual resources of American churches in support of an international system of government was issued recently by a committee of 300 church leaders representing 20 communions meeting here in a three-day national study conference on churches and the international situation.

While its delegates have been named by the participating denominations, the conference has been fostered by the Department of International Justice and Good Will of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

The six sections into which the conference has been divided are presenting their findings to the plenary session after two days' of study. The seminar on "The Churches and American Policy" in its report renounced political and economic isolation and urged the United States, when peace was made, to identify itself with other nations in the organization of a world government.

CURB ON POWER POLITICS

"Only then will power politics be crushed and relief found from the heavy burden of armament," the report reads. "While power within the states has been brought under restraint, power in international relations is absolute, irresponsible, and anarchical. A nation is deemed a great power if it is able to reinforce its policy by force or the threat of force.

"This being true, political power often results in the exploitation of colonial peoples in the subjugation of the weak by the strong. The Christian church finds itself at variance with the whole system of power politics."

The report calls modern statism, implemented by politics of an unfettered national sovereignty, a form of secularism and, therefore, unacceptable to the Christian philosophy.

In qualifying the form of international organization toward which the churches look, the report stressed that the range of such control would be only in certain areas—not over the whole of life. Also it would not seek to create world uniformity.

NO UNIFORMITY

"Christianity, in its spread, the report reminds the Churches, "has not sought nor has it created any totalistic uniformity of ethnic tastes or cultural achievements. Still less should any international federal system seek to do so."

The report was resented by Dr. Luman J. Shafer of New York, Chairman of the Committee on International Relations of the Foreign Missions Conference, and Dr. Charles F. Boss of Chicago, who heads the Peace Commission of the Methodist Church.

NEW U.S. PLANE WILL CARRY TWO TONS BOMBS 11,000 MILES

Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK—With American aviation planning ever larger airplanes and already possessing basic designs for a 250,000-pound "vessel of the air" having a cruising range of 11,000 miles, and with two markets for aircraft instantly available the day peace is declared, aircraft manufacturing is likely to be the least disturbed industry when war ends, in the opinion of Glenn L. Martin, airplane manufacturer, whose concern built the Martin bombers and the China Clippers.

"The curve of growth is going up constantly. When the war is over we will level down, but we haven't anything like as far to go to hit our normal curve again as do other industries," Mr. Martin declared at a luncheon of the Bond Club of New York, held at the Bankers' Club recently.

Describing the 250,000-pound airplane now in the first blue-print stages, he said that as a military vehicle it would be able to carry 64,000 pounds of bombs 3,000 miles, thus becoming a "two-ocean" defense weapon, or it could carry 4,000 pounds of bombs 11,000 miles, thus being able to thrust an American aviation offensive far across the Pacific.

Such a ship will not be built for several years, but the United States already is on the threshhold of constructing 150,000 pound flying machines, which will inaugurate a new era in commercial transportation, Mr. Martin said.

"The day peace is declared, the military market must in the following 12 months buy a lot of new airplanes," he continued. "There is only one exception to that certainty, and that would be disarmament. Every nation must carry adequate arms for defense."

A second market would appear, he added, when many nations who are in the market today for commercial planes and replacements and cannot get delivery come forward with their orders.

ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION ASSAILED BY GENERAL JOHNSON

$20,000,000,000 'Salve' Failed to Cure Economic Ills of Nation, He Declares

N.Y. Times

NEW YORK April 7—Saying that he was as good a Democrat as anybody in the room but tired of being a "sucker Democrat," General Hugh S. Johnson declared last night that the Roosevelt administration had spread a $20,000,000,000 "salve" on the causes of national discontent but had improved neither industry, agriculture business nor employment.

General Johnson, who spoke at the annual Jefferson dinner of the National Democratic Club at the Hotel Commodore, asserted that the cost and uncertainty of this method of salving symptoms of disease in the body politic had prevented and delayed a cure, which can come only by the return of the American business system to normal activity. General Johnson saw little hope of economic recovery through the election of a Republican President or in the re-election of President Roosevelt, which he said was probable and added:

DEPRESSION HELD UNNECESSARY

"In my opinion, further continuation of depression and distress in this country is totally unnecessary. I am convinced that it could vanish almost overnight with an administration of Democrats in Washington. I greatly doubt whether it will ever vanish if Democrats win and then step aside to leave the reins still in the hands of the same cock-eyed, non-Democratic crew of business-baiters, wand-waving wizards, drunken-sailor spenders, janizaries, do-gooders and experimental theorists.

"Almost all it would take to restore prosperity would be to get rid of this crew. If Jim Farley or Jack Garner or Cordell Hull or any other old-school Democrat got in there, they wouldn't even wait on inevitable action. Beginning the day after election, there would be the greatest exodus of economic pansies out of Washington since the Pied Piper did a job as exterminator for Hamelin—and business activity would resume like a flood."

The caustic quality of General Johnson's speech came as a surprise to his audience of a thousand or more and after its delivery the query passed from table to table as to who was responsible for inviting him to make the principal speech at the annual dinner of the leading Democratic club of the nation. It was noticed that the program listed Postmaster General James A. Farley, now in the South, as chairman of the dinner committee.

JOHNSON'S FLINGS APPLAUDED

General Johnson's flings at such leading New Dealers as Messrs. Ickes, Wallace, Corcoran, Cohen and Hopkins were received with applause and shouts of glee by perhaps 60 per cent of the audience. Senator James M. Mead's defense of President Roosevelt and his administration brought comparatively slight applause.

In beginning his speech, General Johnson expressed surprise that he had been invited to address the club.

"You ought to ask such battle-scarred party veterans as Harold Ickes or Henry Wallace, who probably never voted the Democratic ticket in their lives before 1932," General Johnson said, "or the vaudeville team of Corcoran and Cohen, who, if they did support the party before 1932, were not important enough or responsible enough to have it make any difference. My information is that they were Hooverites.

"But you asked for it; I didn't. If you don't like what I say don't say your officials weren't properly warned. They and you were warned by what I frequently say in my column, and they were warned when I was asked to come here that I am not a linguist and can only talk like a Democrat and not like the mangled remains left by the bright young men of the Washington palace guards."

JEFFERSON'S ADVICE URGED

After quoting from one of his recent columns to the effect that the New Deal was such a contradiction of traditional Democratic principles that neither Thomas Jefferson nor Andrew Jackson could recognize it, General Johnson said he was not pleading that the Democratic party go back to the 1835 policies of Jackson, but to go ahead and keep abreast of the times as advised by Jefferson.

"In a twelve-year fight, I helped to invent and sell to the Democratic party the idea, the necessity, of granting economic equality for agriculture," he continued. "Maybe my old Blue Eagle was no aquiline Joe Louis. He certainly was picked to death by a sick chicken, but he first put into effect and scratched the ground for every principal economic and social policy in which this Administration has since taken pride—maximum hours and minimum wages, abolition of sweatshops and child labor, collective bargaining and independent labor representation, a tribunal rather than conflict to settle labor disputes, and an effort, at least, to inject some decency into the welter of cutthroat methods in industrial and commercial competition."

General Johnson said that Democrats had invented these things while the "Fourth New Dealocrats" talked about them. None of the early policies of the Roosevelt administration, he said, tried to set class against class or build up any political monstrosity by Federal handouts to quiet the complaints of discontented groups.

"I object to that for two of many reasons," he declared, referring to the handout policy. "In the first place, the way to satisfy discontent is to remove the causes, not to lard its symptoms with subsidies. In the second place, neither our political nor our economic system can long endure the cost of billions of annual handouts to purchase dissident groups and make the nation safe for the Democratic party."

1932 PLATFORM PRAISED

General Johnson praised the 1932 Democratic national platform as simple, sound and honest and declared that the Administration in putting it into execution during its first hundred days greatly advanced business and employment. During the latter half of 1933, he said, the Administration began to violate every principle and promise of that platform and had been churning in economic futility and failure ever since.

Declaring that representatives of conflicting pressure groups had fastened themselves on the Democratic party, General Johnson said that the party under the Roosevelt leadership had lacked the courage to fight the issues on principle rather than political pap.

Declaring that the "strange new fish in the Democratic puddle" made the Roosevelt policies, he asserted that the President had to depend on the old-line Democratic leaders to put the legislation through Congress.

"It is these veteran Democrats who have borne the heat and burden of all these close contests, not the Schwellenbachs, the Peppers and the Mintons, nor yet the Ickeses, Hopkinses, Corcorans or Wallaces," he said. "It has been the Pat Harrisons, the Joe Robinsons, the Jimmy Byrneses, the Georges of Georgia, the Cordell Hulls and, saddest of all, the loyal, faithful Farleys. They have carried the fight and torch and all too often gotten kicks in the pants for their pains. Certainly our genial Jim, for all his smiling face, seems to sit down slowly as though he would like an air cushion.

EXPECTS REPUBLICAN DEFEAT

"The good Lord knows that I have no wish to give aid and comfort to the Republicans—much as they need it. They haven't shown anything yet to convince me that they have advanced much beyond the gold-awful platform and me-too policy of the 1936 Cleveland convention. I haven't seen anything to indicate that they will put up a much stronger candidate than Governor Landon, and there is no word in the English language adequate to describe anything less formidable than all that.

"The way matters are going now Mr. Roosevelt, whether he takes himself out of the race or not, will be nominated by acclamation after some stampeding cross-of-gold and crown-of-thorns speech in the convention. Then, if the Republicans repeat their campaign of four years ago—nothing but criticism plus imitation New Deal—half of the party saying one thing and the other half saying the reverse of that, and neither saying much—it will be 1936 over again in the election as well as the campaign, and they certainly have shown nothing different from that to date. It looks to me like another certain Republican defeat.

"That's why I am sure that the Republicans are not going to get much aid or comfort out of my kibitzer and probably unwelcome advice to my own party. No, I am not much afraid that it is not going to be a Republican defeat. My concern is whether it is going to be a Democratic victory—or just a triumph for a few fourth New Deal Adullamites making a true jackass out of the grand old Democratic donkey.

"Let's get rid of the interlopers and usurpers in the Democratic party. Let's throw out these strange doctrines which have defiled the temples of our political religion. Let's return to the faith and house of our fathers and let us, the Democrats, and no strangers, be master in that house. Let's do these things not merely as an act of party expediency but as a valiant deed in defense of the very security of our country and the welfare and prosperity of the citizens of every party, faith and creed."

Senator Mead, who followed General Johnson, found a striking resemblance between Jefferson and President Roosevelt. Both, he said, were born in wealth and lived to serve the poor and unfortunate, and Roosevelt like Jefferson seeks a formula that will make democracy work.

"Roosevelt is the Jefferson of this day," Senator Mead asserted. "Criticized by some for his liberalism, beloved by the masses for his humanism, he is a beacon of hope shining throughout a troubled, war-torn world."

Thomas C. Meeks, president of the club, introduced Supreme Court Justice Lloyd Church, the toastmaster. Supreme Court Justice Benjamin F. Schreiber spoke on the career of Jefferson.

Others at the speakers' table were the five Democratic county leaders of the city, Representative Christopher D. Sullivan, Edward J. Flynn, Frank V. Kelly, James A. Roe and William T. Fetherston, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Surrogate James A. Foley, Lieutenant Governor Charles Poletti, Senator Robert F. Wagner, John F. Curry, George W. Olvany, Judge Frederick E. Crane and Vincent Dailey.

SCIENCE FINDS INFLUENZA FOE

Human Nasal Secretions Produce Substance to Curb Epidemic Virus

N.Y. Times

NEW YORK,—The discovery that the nasal secretions of human beings contain a substance that inactivates the virus of epidemic influenza is reported in the current issue of Science, official organ of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, recently.

This discovery, which may mark the first significant step toward the conquest of this dread disease that killed some 20,000,000 persons during the epidemic in 1918, is reported by Dr. Thomas Francis Jr., noted authority on the influenza and other viruses, of the department of bacteriology, New York University College of Medicine.

The substance appears to be different from the antibacterial agents known as antibodies, that provide bodily immunity against specific bacteria, Dr. Francis reports. Workers in England who have observed it also, he says, suggest that the agent is an enzyme, a living ferment that has the ability to stimulate specific chemical activity in the living body.

The nasal secretions were taken from normal subjects and from patients suffering from common colds and hay fever, Dr. Francis reports. The mysterious antiinfluenza substance, he found, exists in about the same amount in the normal, healthy subjects and in the common cold patients. It does not, however, exist in the same amount in all individuals, some having more than others, while some do not have it at all.

The fact that some individuals possess this antiinfluenza substance while others do not, may explain, Dr. Francis suggests, why some individuals contract influenza while others under the same conditions of exposure do not.

The human nasal substance, Dr. Francis reports, protected mice against 1,000 deadly doses of the influenza virus. The nasal secretion from only half the human subjects, however, inactivated the virus, while those from the other half gave the mice no protection at all. The secretions tested came from thirty-three common cold and hay fever patients and from fifteen normal individuals.

Dr. Francis also reports that three British scientists, Dr. P. M. Burnet, Dr. Lush and Dr. A. V. Jackson, recently reported finding that the human nasal secretions contained also inactive viruses of other diseases. This indicates that a new avenue of approach has been opened for the conquest of such virus diseases as infantile paralysis.

ELECTRONS COUNTED BY PROFESSOR

Sir Arthur Eddington Employed Special Type Of Analysis

By HERBERT B. NICHOLS

Christian Science Monitor

If someone asserted that there were 6,469,352,397,463 bricks in a certain building, you might well ask him to prove it; but does anyone care to dispute Sir Arthur Eddington, Plumian Professor of Astonomy and Experimental Philosophy in the University of Cambridge, when he says the number of building blocks (protons and electrons) in the physical universe is twice 15,747,724,136,275,002,577,605,653,961,181,555,468,044,717,914,527,116,709,366,231,425,076,186,631,031,296?

That allows for an equal number of protons and electrons. A positron is counted as minus one electron (so that the establishment and annihilation of electrons and positrons in pairs which is continually happening, does not affect the total) and no account is made of mesotrons, "because we don't know too much about them yet," Sir Arthur explains.

Cynics will say he is perfectly safe in making such a calculation, since no one is ever going to count the particles to find out if he is 13 "bricks" off.

But Sir Arthur has perhaps the best possible answer to such criticism. In his latest work, "The Philosophy of Physical Science" (New York: Macmillan. $2.50), he counters:

FAIR AVERAGE

"If I had thought there was the least chance that anyone would count the particles, I would never have published my calculation. My belief that I know the exact number of protons and electrons in the universe does not rank among my strongest scientific convictions, but I should describe it as a fair average sort of belief. I am, however, strongly convinced that if I have got the number wrong, it is just a silly mistake, which would speedily be corrected if there were more workers in this field."

The reason he is so sure of the figure is not the one the average person would suspect. It is because in making the calculation he employed a type of analysis appropriate only to uncountable particles, so that if anyone could persuade him that his calculations were made on a wrong basis he would be willing to withdraw the figure without waiting to hear whether the count disagreed.

It is quite entertaining to follow Sir Arthur's reasoning on why the protons and electrons are uncountable. It is not because there are so many of them, necessarily. Rather it is because an electron, in accord with quantum physics, is never definitely in one place, but is smeared over a probability distribution, and all electrons are exactly alike.

PROBABILITIES

There is nothing to remember about the last electron counted, either its position or any distinguishing mark. How would you know whether the next you notice is a new one (providing there was some way of noticing electrons in mass) or one already counted? The apportionment of electrons in any given mass at any given moment is known as a probability distribution, and if anyone ever tires of counting sheep some night, let him start in on just a tiny bundle of electrons in a probability distribution.

This latest book by Sir Arthur is the substance of his course of lectures at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1938, and affords him the opportunity of developing more fully than in earlier books the fundamentals of philosophic thought associated with modern advances in physical science. To appreciate it fully, one must be conversant with the leading philosophers of the last three centuries, and with the essential works of leading physicists and mathematicians since Newton. A considerable amount of detailed knowledge is assumed at many points as the lecturer builds up his "scientific epistemology," defined as that branch of philosophy which treats of the nature of knowledge concerning the physical universe.

In many of his previous works, notably "The Nature of the Physical World," written 11 years ago, Sir Arthur made statements which by themselves seem to border on metaphysics. The often quoted subjective observation, "Matter may eventually turn out to be thought," would come under this category. However, reading this and taking into consideration the whole book as a background, it appears that the modern natural scientists and philosophers are speaking subjectively, and only of the human mind.

U.S. TO INSIST THAT MEXICO DEAL DIRECTLY

Oil Dispute Complications Further Mixed by Action Of President Cardenas

Christian Science Monitor

MEXICO, D. F.—Dismissal by President Cardenas of the possibility for international arbitration of the Mexican oil expropriation now adds one more complication to the already involved controversy which has continued for almost two years. Insistence that any solution achieved must be reached between the companies and Mexico, and not through mediation between the United States and Mexican Governments is interpreted as a direct challenge to the Department of State not to mix in what is here held to be a purely domestic affair.

These two points were made by President Cardenas in answer to a questionnaire submitted by foreign correspondents and have had immediate repercussions both here and in the United States. Latest reports from Washington indicate that the Department of State continues to be concerned with the knotty problem and that it may refuse to take "no" for an answer to arbitration requests, if it decides to make them under the provisions of the Inter-American Arbitration Pact of 1929.

The Mexican press has meanwhile come once again to the support of the President and his oil expropriation problem, chiefly through editorial attacks upon the pamphlet prepared by Donald R. Richberg, as lawyer for the companies, on the Mexican Oil Seizure. Typical of this comment is that of a leading daily, El Universal, which says:

MEXICO'S POSITION

"Our Government has not refused to negotiate, but has refused to accept as bases for an agreement the concessions of unprecedented privileges which are in conflict with the Constitution. The National Government is in an irreproachable position, both as regards domestic legislation and international law. It is supported by reason and equity, as well as by the Mexican people, conscious that in the controversy its dignity and legitimate interests must be safeguarded."

Mr. Richberg's pamphlet is a severe indictment of the Mexican Government's position, both before and after the expropriation. He accuses the Government of bad faith in prolonging the negotiations without any desire to come to an agreement. And he comes to the conclusion that the solution may be found only in direct dealings between the two Governments, since all attempts made between the companies and Mexico have failed.

"It can be fairly said," writes Mr. Richberg, "that the property losses resulting from the confiscation of oil properties, although enormous, are in a long view not so important as the destruction of established principles of justice and fair dealing upon which all commercial and social intercourse between nations must depend. Those principles, when under attack by one government, can only be effectively preserved by their vigorous defense by other governments properly concerned to uphold them."

After deploring the policy of compulsion, and its results as seen in a world at war today, he nevertheless questions:

"Where is it possible to find a solution devoid of some element of compulsion unless parties in conflict either voluntarily agree upon a settlement, or voluntarily agree to have their controversies settled for them by others: Yet when a Government seizes property and rejects a demand for restitution, while at the same time it declares both its inability and unwillingness to make full and assured compensation, what solution is available unless such a government can be induced to submit voluntarily all the issues of the controversy to an impartial judgment?"

It was apparently in response to this direct appeal by the companies to the Department of State to intervene on their behalf that the Cardenas statement was made. No arbitration by international courts and no inter-governmental dealings, answered President Cardenas promptly. Neither are acceptable nor legal, he said, since he contends that the companies cannot complain of a denial of justice.

He repeated Mexico's expressed willingness to pay for the expropriated properties, without revealing by what means, and again criticized them for refusing to cooperate in the estimation of indemnities. The companies contend that if they accepted the indemnity proposal they would also be accepting the expropriation principle and that they are convinced the indemnities will be only a small portion of the worth of their lost possessions.

CARDENAS EXPLAINS FURTHER

A further clarification of the indemnity proceedings was made by President Cardenas in his statement that once the amount is fixed by the courts it cannot be changed. This also represents a completely domestic view of the affair, and would prohibit any appeal from the evaluation placed upon the properties by Mexican courts and appraisers will work on the estimate since the companies failed to appoint a representative.

That Mexico will continue to fight the affair through as a purely national controversy with foreign operators is indicated by recent developments and comment here. The attack upon the Monroe Doctrine as an instrument which in the past was used to intervene in the domestic affairs of Latin American nations, which attack was made recently by President Cardenas, is interpreted as revealing the line which the resistance to arbitration will take.

Citation at the same time of the Buenos Aires Conference when the principle of mutual consultation between American governments, if any one of them was threatened with an invasion of its sovereignty, points to an appeal being prepared for support from other Latin American nations. The Government newspaper, El Nacional, wrote that the Standard Oil Company is asking for the return of the "Big Stick" policy which, it appears, will be alleged if arbitration should be insisted upon against Mexico's wishes.

SPANISH EXILES IN FRANCE FACE CLOSING OF CAMPS

Men Refugees Entering French Army; Women and Children Integrated Into Homes

By WM. HENRY CHAMBERLIN

Christian Science Monitor

PERPIGNAN, France—Near this attractive town, where the influence of Spain is felt in the Moorish character of some of the architecture, the French Government has taken steps to erase one of the remaining human monuments of the tragic civil war in Spain—the internment camp at Argeles for Spanish refugees.

When this correspondent visited Perpignan recently, 13,000 Spaniards without a country—3,000 men, 7,000 women, and 3,000 children—were lodged at Argeles, a seaside resort in full view of the impressive chain of the Pyrenees.

Today, under a recent Government order closing all internment camps for Spanish refugees, the camp is destined to be but a memory. The men refugees are entering the French army and industry; the women and children are being integrated into French homes. Others have returned to Spain or emigrated to other countries.

But when the camp was filled with exile Spaniards, its barriers were marked out by barbed wire and it was guarded by detachments of French and Senegalese soldiers, the latter huge Negroes with wide staring eyes. The camp consisted of barracks constructed out of wood and tarpaper, a thin protection against the winter winds, although stoves have been installed and general conditions for the refugees had been greatly improved since they hurled themselves in a panic-stricken mass across the French frontier after the crumbling of the Republican regime in Spain early in 1939.

PLENTY OF PLAIN FARE

The French authorities did not favor visits to the camps. They had been annoyed by criticisms of conditions, some of which may have been justified, while some was dictated by partisan political motives. Since the outbreak of the war there has been a general tightening of restrictions and I was the first foreign journalist to visit Argeles, now the largest internment camp, since the beginning of hostilities.

It was difficult to maintain a high standard of neatness or cleanliness in a camp where a strong wind blows up a cloud of sand and where the water is brackish. Moreover, some of the women refugees, after the many shocks and disappointments of the last year, gave the impression of being downhearted and shaken in morale.

So far as food was concerned, the inmates of the camp received an adequate supply of plain substantial fare, even if a dietician would have regretted a lack of green vegetables. The daily bread allowance was 600 grams, over a pound. Twice a week 200 grams of fresh meat were allotted for the meal of every inmate; on two other days fish. Meat and fish was supplemented by lentils, onions, and chickpeas to which the Spaniards are accustomed.

If the general impression of continuing food shortage in Spain is correct the refugees were probably faring better in a French internment camp than they would if they returned to their homes. And many of the 6,000 men, at least, who are still in France would have to fear political reprisals if they should return to their native country.

REDS WATCHED

The colonel in charge of the camp, who accompanied me on my visit, was of the genial paternalistic type which one often encounters in the French Army. He was especially proud of the hospital which he had installed. He joked with the matrons and teachers of the improvised schools and, like his subordinate officers, seemed to be anxious to make his charges as comfortable as circumstances permitted.

There was just one point at which the colonel's benevolence forsook him. This was when he pointed to a specially guarded and isolated section of the camp, where the inmates, as he said, were "tres dangereux," "very dangerous." Here were some 150 or 200 men who were accused, rightly or wrongly, of being Communists or violent Anarchists. I was not invited to visit this part of the camp, where the regime, I gathered, was considerably more rigorous than elsewhere.

Closely connected with the camp at Argeles were some of the Quaker relief workers who are so often found in places, unfortunately so increasingly numerous in these last years, where special efforts of mercy are called for. While the French authorities supplied the essentials to the inmates, these relief workers had helped to provide a few amenities that might make living a little more cheerful than it would otherwise have been. They were working with the aid of funds not only from their own organization, but from a number of bodies, governmental and private, from several European countries which had taken an interest in the plight of these victims of the Spanish civil war.

One of the most active of these relief workers, a trained nurse from New Zealand, had scoured the Pyrenees to find a supply of fresh milk for the babies in the camp. She had also been instrumental in establishing a maternity home in a nearby chateau. The relief workers had helped with the schools, with the little library and reading room of the camp, with the provision of sewing material to give the women occupation and a little money.

150,000 REMAIN IN FRANCE

The whole character of the Spanish refugee problem has greatly changed since 400,000 or 500,000 Spaniards, retreating soldiers, fugitive civilians, men women and children, crashed the gates of the French Pyrenees frontier early in 1939. Almost two thirds have returned to Spain. A comparatively small number, about 20,000, have found new homes in Mexico and in other Spanish-American countries. The number of those remaining in France is about 150,000.

In the beginning the French official attitude was to keep the refugees in camps and to hope that they would go home. The war and the needs of labor for the Army, in industry and in agriculture has brought about a change of viewpoint.

Argeles represented an exception rather than a rule. Able-bodied men among the refugees, if they did not wish to fight (some 5,000 did actually join the French Army) or to return to Spain were mostly conscripted for labor service under the direction of the Army. They receive the nominal pay (50 or 75 centimes a day) of the French private while engaged in roadbuilding, laying down barbed wire, and carrying out other work which the Army requires. A few have found employment in factories and on the farms, where the demand for labor is great. But the Army, which has controlled the camps from the beginning, had first call on the services of the inmates.

FRONTIER CLOSELY OBSERVED

From Argeles one could clearly see the picturesque line of the Pyrenees, with watchtowers of the French border forts standing up at intervals. Beyond the Pyrenees was the land from which these unfortunate people (especially pitiful was the lot of some 1,500 disabled soldiers) had been hurled out or had fled.

They were the victims of one of those episodes in man's inhumanity to man which might have excited universal sympathy and a rush of relief 50 years ago, but which are now in some danger of being overlooked because there are so many of them. Now their ultimate fate is linked with that of the great drama of the new European war, which is still in its first stages.

Every frontier is a tense place when a country is at war and one could see evidences at Perpignan and in the neighborhood that France is not neglecting its Pyrenees border, even though relation with General Franco's regime in Spain have been smooth, as a general rule, up to the present time. The frontier is being carefully watched and it was in the neighborhood of Argeles that I was asked, for the first and only time, for the military "saufconduite," or travel permit which every foreigner must have in order to be permitted to travel in France.

FRANCE BANS RED AND NAZI PROPAGANDA

More Drastic Punishment, Including Capital Penalties, Is Contemplated

Christian Science Monitor

PARIS, April 5—More drastic punishment, including imposition of capital penalties, is contemplated for persons convicted of carrying out Communist or Hitlerite propaganda in France. These increased penalties would be provided under terms of a new decree law drafted by Senator Henri Roy, Minister of the Interior, with the approval of the Cabinet.

The decree, which awaits only Premier Paul Reynaud's signature, provides that individuals convicted of having prepared, furnished, or stocked for reproduction "instruments of propaganda of the Third International" or Hitlerite propaganda are guilty of treason and hence liable to the extreme penalty.

A further tightening of the regime's repression against Communists is indicated by the Government's decision to transfer concentration camps for arrested agitators from the Parisian region to North Africa. Eight Communist Deputies whose prison terms were suspended following the recent trial will be assigned to concentration camps in the central part of France.

NEW MEASURES OF SECURITY

The Minister of the Interior has instructed the prefects, chief local administrative officials, to "take exceptional measures of administrative security," especially for communities where Communist mayors and municipal councils were recently ousted.

The new Government probably hopes to acquire some political credit from this demonstration of energy against Communists since the opposition which manifested itself in the Chamber of Deputies on the eve of Easter came largely from Rightist Parties which found the Reynaud Cabinet insufficiently anti-Russian and anti-Communist.

PART OF WAR PROGRAM

While it is most unlikely that Premier Reynaud will allow this opposition to hurry him into hasty steps effecting Franco-Soviet relations, he evidently is willing to inaugurate a regime of more rigorous repression of Communists as part of the general program of more energetic prosecution of the war.

The Communist Party in France once counted millions of Frenchmen among its members, held 77 of 618 seats in the Chamber of Deputies, and formed part of the People's Front which governed the Nation from 1936 to 1938.

The Government subsequently pursued its "red" hunt by enacting a law expelling from public office all Communists two failed to resign from the party within a month after imposition of the ban.

Fourteen Communist members of the Chamber of Deputies saved themselves by resigning in time and are sitting in the Chamber today.

WORLD POWERS SPEED STUDY OF CHEMISTRY

Economic Expansion Is Result Of Activity in Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia, S. America

Christian Science Monitor

PITTSBURGH, Pa. — How chemistry is faring in the world today is reported by Dr. William A. Hamor, Associate Director of Mellon Institue, Pittsburgh, Pa., who has completed a survey of some 21 Nations, belligerents and neutrals alike.

"All are striving to accelerate economic expansion with the aid of science," Dr. Hamor said. "In Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia, and South America, intensified efforts to build up chemical industries are under way. Recent discoveries suggest a practically limitless range of investigation, it is said. Contrasting with the production of military materials by the warring countries, Italy harnesses volcanoes for power."

Even in Finland the chemical industry has been active. At Uleaborg last year a large nitrogen plant was projected while at Helsingfors the production of motor fuel from peat was under experimental study.

CHEMISTRY IN GERMANY

Germany has nearly 600,000 people, almost 12,000 of whom are professionally trained chemists, employed in the chemical industry. The Reichstelle Chemie or chemical trade control bureau has commandeered and is regulating the use of an extensive range of raw materials of chemistry.

"Germany has major shortages of asbestos, bauxite, chromium, copper, mercury, molybdenum, nickel, phosphates, tin, tungsten, and vanadium," the report says. "It need not be concerned about coal, magnesite, manganese, potash, and zinc, and possibly asbestos, mercury, phosphates, and sulfur, of which the chances of future supplies are good.

"German railroads and steel works are reasonably adequate, but the weakness in the war is the proximity of areas of industrial concentration to the western front.

"Germany's copper-smelting industry has made progress in recent years owing to the increase of productive capacity and modernization of plants, which have enabled the smelting of considerably larger quantities of ore and increasing the recovery of by-products while reducing operating costs. A notable consequence of this improvement has been a marked increase in the recovery of nickel and gold, small quantities of which are mixed with the central German copper ore.

GASOLINE SUPPLIES

"German production and consumption of magnesium and aluminum increased in 1939. Magnesium is being substituted for imported heavier nonferrous metals in the construction of automobiles and aircraft.

"The yearly synthetic gasoline production of Germany is said to have reached 2,500,000 tons. With adequate technical preparation and with petroleum from Rumania and U.S.S.R., Germany will not be handicapped by a lack of aviation fuels.

"The blending of alcohol in gasoline motor fuel, which has been compulsory since 1930 in varying ratios, has been discontinued for the greater part of Germany and will be required in the northern zone only. Some authorities think that the need for liquid fuel is likely to become desperate in one to three years of war."

RESEARCH IN BRITAIN

British researches have been indexed and classified, but not regimented, for war purposes, Dr. Hamor notes. A voluntary register containing upward of 80,000 names has been prepared and is maintained by the National Service Department of the Ministry of Labor.

"Advances were made in Great Britain in the knowledge of the control of inclusions in steel, the effect of temperature on the properties of steels, creep resistance, and alloying," the report continues. "Rustless steels have been produced which are said to maintain a reasonable protective film at temperatures in excess of 1,000 degrees Centigrade."

The aluminum industry in Manchoukuo, various electro-chemical enterprises, the production of acetic acid, calcium carbide, and synthetic rubber, and the manufacture of machine tools, arms, and aircraft parts have been expanded, according to a summary of developments in Japan.

JAPANESE PRODUCTION

"Work has continued on the production of synthetic gasoline from carbon monoxide and hydrogen at ordinary pressure. The synthetic gasoline now being made in Japan, is said to cost three times as much as imported gasoline, but its production is rendered possibe by Government subsidies.

"The coalescence of the small textile research laboratories into one large establishment to be aided by the Government is a project under discussion. Japan's textile dyeing industry is feeling the impact of the European war through the unavailability of dyes."

The possibility of Italy remaining neutral in the European war has intensified production and research already active in the chemical field, the report says. Five educational institutions have received grants for industrial research.

"The replacement of petroleum products by compressed gases in the propulsion of automotive vehicles is proceeding apace in Naples and Milan. Many omnibuses in Naples are running on coal gas, and methane has been extensively adopted in Milan, where the production of methane from sewage sludge is receiving experimental attention. Throughout the country methane is used as the fuel for 1,500 omnibuses.

"In Tuscany is the source of power for northern Italian industry—natural steam of volcanic origin. Twelve turbines harnessed to 300 steam wells are turning out 1,250,000 kilowatts of electricity a day and six additional turbines are to be installed in the near future."

GARNER PUTS NO 'IFS' IN HIS PRESIDENCY BID

At Age of 70, He is Political 'Glamour Boy'; Only Man With Nerve to Oppose FDR

By JACK BEALL

N.Y. Herald Tribune

WASHINGTON —Until recently John Nance Garner, Vice-President of the United States, was the only avowed Democratic candidate for President who had not pitched his candidacy on an "if" basis. One of the political sensations of the day is that Postmaster General James A. Farley has now followed his lead and is apparently out to help Garner stop Roosevelt. But for many months after he flung his wide Texas somebrero into the ring the Vice-President was the only candidate with the nerve openly to oppose President Roosevelt. In doing so he was exhibiting the same political courage which characterized him in a public career 38 years.

As the spearhead of opposition, as the very symbol of the conservative revolt in Congress against the New Deal, the Vice-President has come to grips with the man whom he, more than any other, helped to make President. It was Mr. Garner, then Speaker of the House, who telephoned Representative Sam Rayburn, of Texas, his floor manager at the 1932 convention, to release the California and Texas delegates pledged to him, thus breaking the deadlock of that convention and bringing about the Roosevelt-Garner ticket that has swept the nation twice.

The man whom he had previously referred to affectionately as "The Cap'n," or "Boss," and who had spoken affectionately aforetime of him as "Old Man Common Sense," have reached a historic parting of the ways, a symbolic break that may portend the defeat of the Democratic party after eight years of unparalleled power.

GARNER IS REGULAR

Each is set in his own determination to see that the other does not receive the nomination. Some politicians believe that either may "take a walk" if the other is named, taking large segments of the party with him. But those who know the great party regularity of Mr. Garner are willing to bet that the President and the New Dealers are much more likely to bolt a conservative like Mr. Garner than Mr. Garner is likely to bolt Mr. Roosevelt.

If Mr. Roosevelt is "stopped" it will be largely due to the opposition which will coalesce about the banner of Mr. Garner. Those who belittle the chances of Mr. Garner's stopping the President should remember that he has forgotten, as the saying goes, more than most politicians have learned about their craft, and that he has seldom been defeated in any political project to which he has set his hand. It should be remembered also that many things can happen between now and July 15. For one thing, peace might be brought about in Europe, a factor which would instantly shift all political betting odds.

It can be said also that Mr. Garner has more political "if" than any public figure with the exception of the incumbent of the White House. At the age of seventy, he is a political "glamour boy," a "character" in the tradition of Will Rogers, a homespun "original," a frontiersman come to town who says what he thinks and says it in such a salty, tangy way that even when his words are unpopular no offense is given. Incidentally, most of the talks that Mr. Garner makes are private—in the lobby, in his private office or to such small groups as the Cabinet.

He is the most silent man that ever came to Congress, if the testimony of the Congressional Record can be taken as true. In thirty years, he has not had a dozen speeches in the Record and it is doubtful if he has made that many in being re-elected to Congress.

So well has he built up the tradition of public silence, but so well known are his views that, if he should receive the nomination, he probably would make fewer speeches than any other Presidential candidate in history.

In small groups, Mr. Garner is anything but silent and is probably the most skilled person in Congress on drawing out the other fellow and learning what he is thinking. He circulates constantly about the Senate chamber, buttonholing this one and that, affectionately patting one Senator on the shoulder as he passes and joshing with another.

EFFECTIVE WITH RYE

The Vice-President's room off the Senate chamber has a well stocked cellarette. After any session a group will drift in there and bits of highly significant politics will be talked and laughed over. Friends of Mr. Garner say he can extract more information from a group of Senators with a quart of rye whisky than any man alive. Mr. Garner has always taken his toddy and found it an efficient, as well as an agreeable, way of transacting public and private business. He has never made any bones about it. His expression, "Let's strike a blow for liberty" during the prohibition era and his predilection for "branch water" rather than carbonated to go with is rye have become traditional.

In the confraternity of politics in the House and Senate, Mr. Garner has made thousands of friends and this nucleus of friends throughout the country, powerful in their states, will play a major part in keeping him well up in the running when the convention opens.

Hundreds of thousands of others know him as an elder statesman who does not stand on his dignity, as the most approachable of men in public life and as one of the ruggedest rugged individuals who has ever come to Capitol Hill or had a crack at the White House. He is able to kindle within them the glow that so few politicians of these days are able to cause in the breasts of the electorate.

Being a man of this type made it possible for Mr. Garner to turn into a valued political asset John L. Lewis' excoriation of him as a "poker-playing, whisky-drinking, evil old man." For a man who has made a great reputation by poker playing. Mr. Garner no longer plays the game with cards and chips. He still plays a type of poker game, but with power the stakes.

The game of poker has had a rather important part in his life and his career. It was due to his poker playing that he met his wife. She had publicly disapproved of him for his reputation as a poker player when he was running for county judge back in Uvalde. Jack Garner heard of it, made a point of meeting Miss Mariette Rheiner, converted her from the belief that he was a wicked young man, and married her.

Mrs. Garner has had more than a wife's usual share in bringing her husband to the top. She is his secretary, in fact as well as by title, and she works eight to ten hours a day in the Vice-President's office looking after his mail, his "fences" and his political future just as she has done since 1902. She prepares his lunch there in the office, frequently of corn bread and turnip greens.

She is the influence that makes him dress in white tie and tails for the three or four big official events of the social season which Mr. Garner so undisguisedly detests.

The Garner hours have something to do with the fact that the Vice-President no longer plays poker. That game usually keeps its devotees up late and Mr. Garner seldom misses a 10 o'clock bedtime. The Garners are both up at 5:30 a.m. and in their office by 7:30.

Possibly as the result of this Spartan regimen, Mr. Garner has reaped the rewards of being healthy, wealthy and wise. His verve and endurance might be envied by a much younger man. He is credited with being worth well over $1,000,000 from thrifty dealings in real estate, commodities, banks, newspapers and cattle. His sagacity is acknowledged by all who know him; it has been gained the hard way, from life rather than from books.

OF LOG CABIN BREED

His pioneering father and mother gave the Vice-President a send-off to greatness by furnishing a log cabin for him to be born in. The log cabin was in a clearing in the Texas wilderness known as Blossom Prairie. The date was November 22, 1869.

Jack helped on the farm, played on the Possum Trot baseball nine, had little schooling, but saved up enough money to go to Vanderbilt University, hoping for a more formal education. He stayed about a week at the university, finding he lacked the background necessary to keep up with his studies.

He went to Clarksville, Tex., and began reading law in an office until a physician advised him to live in a dryer climate. He took the advice and reached on a December night in 1892, the hamlet of Uvalde, with $151.25 in his pocket.

He became a junior partner in a law firm there, rode circuit, made friends, earned money, saved it, ran for county judge, was elected, married, and took his first step in a law-making career when he went to the Texas Legislature in 1899. He became something of a power in the Legislature by becoming a member of the "Bluebeard committee" which unmercifully knifed and sliced pork-barrel bills. He was no spender even then. He made his own opportunity to go to Washington by introducing the bill to redistrict west Texas, giving an additional Congressman to represent the 15th Texas District, an area as big as Pennsylvania. He represented the Fifteenth until he was elected Vice-President in 1932, thirty consecutive years.

As the Representative from the Rio Grande, Mr. Garner kept his mouth tight shut, attended committees, made friends, introduced few bills, ran errands for his constituents and played poker. But he played it with the biggest and most influential men in Congress, among them Speaker Joseph Gurney Cannon, whom later he was to fight hard to depose as "czar" of the house. The contacts at the "Boar's Nest," the place in K Street where the games were held, helped him to know and get on with the ruling clique in the House. It helped him get good committee assignments, votes for the few bills that he sponsored, and supplied an insight into the characters of those in the games.

In the fight to democratize the House from Cannon rule, Mr. Garner earned the goodwill of the late Champ Clark, who soon was to become Speaker. That friendship lasted through the years, and today Mr. Garner finds as one of his firmest friends in public life Senator Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, son of the Speaker.

The young Representative grew in political stature partly through his opposition to pork-barrel bills, large and small, and in 1912 he received the highest vote of any candidate for a position on the mighty Ways and Means Committee. He was still making no speeches for the record. Sometimes he spoke, but he used the privilege of extension and revision to strike out entire speeches until friends went to him and insisted that he should not do it any more. Some of the things he said were too good to be lost.

All this time he was being regularly re-elected back home. It is of some historic interest to know the attitude which Mr. Garner took with his constituents about his job. He was no slavish follower of the popular will. He had the philosophy of politics that a lawmaker ought to use his own best judgment of what was best and stand or fall by it later.

ADVISER TO WILSON

There new follows the period in Mr. Garner's life when he has "gotten somewhere" and is prepared to go much higher. One of his greatest fights came soon after, over the graduated income tax in the Underwood stariff act. Mr. Garner wanted it scaled on a capacity-to-pay basis while most of the other leaders wanted it on a flat basis for rich and poor alike. In an epic struggle Mr. Garner won his point, and it marked the beginning of the modern income-tax system in the United States.

His stature now so greatly increased, he began to be called to the White House to advise President Wilson on legislation. He went twice a week during the war years and was received secretly.

By 1920 the Republican landslide under President Harding had reduced the Democratic party to minority status in the House, and the death soon thereafter of Representative Claude Kitchen, of North Carolina, made Mr. Garner the ranking minority member on the Ways and Means Committee. There was only one other Democrat who could contest with him the right to be minority leader and that was Representative Finis J. Garrett, of Tennessee.

Mr. Garner might have won the nominal leadership immediately, but he forebore to contest it, thus binding the Garrett supporters to him later. He was the actual leader, from all reports, during this time, but handled the situation so delicately that Mr. Garrett took no offense. When the Tennesseean died in 1928 there was no question of the leadership. Mr. Garner came into title as well as authority of minority leader.

Mr. Garner's greatest coup as minority leader was defeating the Republicans and the late Andrew Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, on the tax-reduction bill. Mr. Mellon sent up a tax-reduction bill which called for reductions of 25 per cent on incomes under $10,000 and of 39 per cent on incomes under $200,000. Mr. Garner countered with an amendment giving the smaller-income brackets the major reduction, up to 60 per cent, and giving the higher-income payers, between $100,000 and $200,000, only 11 per cent.

There was a great outcry that Mr. Garner was out to "ruin" the national finances, but the Texan contended that his amendment would bring in the required revenue. He pointed out that Mr. Mellon as an estimator of revenues, had been inaccurate in his prediction the year before by $900,000,000. By tact, trading, popularity and lucid argument Mr. Garner won over enough Republican votes to triumph, 221 to 196.

After he had been minority leader for three years the election cycle brought the Democrats out on top in the House, although the Senate was still Republican, and Mr. Garner became Speaker with a working majority of three votes.

Then came the greatest test of his career: to keep his slim majority, control the House and put through legislation. He always had been a good "hoss trader" and had won most of his victories as a lawyer by settlements out of court. Now began an intricate process of compromise and balancing of force against force to maintain control of the House.

While President Hoover was still in office the Speaker cooperated on emergency economic measures, such as setting up the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and liberalizing the Federal Reserve System. President Hoover consulted him many times.

SUPPRESSED HOUSE REVOLT

But in the black depths of the depression, the House revolted and got completely out of hand when a compromise revenue bill was brought in raising taxes and ignoring many of the nostrums and panaceas which the "money doctors" of that time were demanding. The bill was in process of being torn to pieces, with $500,000,000 in revenues sliced off, while bond prices and Government security prices began to slip. The Garner prestige was at stake when he stepped down from the rostrum and took the floor.

He made the speech of his life that day and wound up by calling for a show of hands of those who wanted to balance the budget. All but a few did. It was characterized in the newspapers as a great feat and a great personal triumph. It restored Mr. Garner's leadership and brought the House back to order.

The next test came when Mr. Garner brought in a $2,309,000,000 public works bill for the relief program. An end to the political truce with the White House came when President Hoover denounced it as the greatest pork-barrel scheme conceivable. When it passed Congress, the President vetoed it. Congress promptly passed another, very similar to the Garner measure, which became law.

Not long after that came the Chicago convention, where the Roosevelt-Garner ticket was nominated. Mr. Garner made one speech for the ticket before the elections. He had passed most of the campaign period in Uvalde hunting and fishing with his garage-proprietor friend, Ross Brumfield.

No Throttlebottom, Mr. Garner promptly began to build the Vice-Presidency, hitherto usually a dead-end job, into one of potency. He not only attended Cabinet meetings but he was as much a wheel horse for the Administration in the Senate as the Senate majority leader of that time, the late Joseph T. Robinson, of Missouri. He is one of the few Vice-Presidents who have grown in stature with time.

The break was a long time coming, after the beginning of the second term, and it came chiefly over spending. Mr. Garner never has become imbued with the spirit or doctrine of deficit spending. He has pleaded with the President year after year for a balanced budget. He thought it could and must be accomplished in 1937 and 1938, but the President, after dallying a while with economy, plumped for the Eccles theory and a huge spend-lend bill. Mr. Garner went on the warpath. He was credited with a break with the President over the court expansion bill when he left Washington and did not return until the last stages of that bill's defeat.

There is considerable doubt about that opposition's having constituted a break. He did do all he could, when he returned, to bind up the party wounds, and the best opinion in Washington seems to be that this difference was only another element of strain that was to bring on the rupture later.

Another matter of great strain was the conduct of the Government during the sit-down strikes of early 1937. Mr. Garner was very outspoken about the illegality of these strikes, and earned Mr. Lewis's disregard through what he said to the President then about the leader of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Still another factor was the President's punitive attitude toward business, his constant chivying with speeches and legislation, on top of his placing reform before recovery.

The Garner hand has been seen and felt in several recent fights in the Senate and even in the House, where he still exerts enormous influence. He is credited with having helped curb the President on his later relief measures, to have brought about the earlier defeat of the executive reorganization bill in the House and to have knocked out the last spend-lend bill.

One thing has led to another with the inevitableness of Greek tragedy until now the President and Vice-President are open political enemies, with Mr. Garner an announced candidate against Mr. Roosevelt's unannounced candidacy.

However much they are political enemies, it is beautiful to see their warm affection for each other when in public together.

HOLLAND LOOKS TO HER DIKES AS LONG AS THE WAR LASTS

Although Writer Believes She Will Escape Invasion, Says Dutch Prepared for the Worst

By CORNELIUS VANDERBREGGEN, Jr.

Current History

German troops are going to march through Holland—that prediction will be made and remade as long as there is a peaceful valley in the sea called Holland and a warring Europe around it.

The Nazi invasion of Holland was announced by an excited American radio news reporter one evening in April, 1939—and shortly thereafter denied. It has been mapped out daily by armchair strategists since Hitler's troops marched into Poland last September. It was represented as inevitable on the week-end of November 11, 1939—but, failed to materialize. It made the headlines again a few weeks ago.

As long as this war lasts The Netherlands will continue to be subjected to theoretical conquests. Its ports will be seized vicariously by raiders round-the-dinner-table. Its leading cities will be bombed, its dikes will be blown up, its land will be inundated by invaders who never leave their armchairs.

But German troops will not set foot on Dutch soil—for at least three good reasons:

1. If Germany were to launch a drive straight across Holland to seize the naval bases of Flushing and Rotterdam and the airports at Eindhoven, Amsterdam and Soesterberg she would be confronted by the much discussed Dutch inundation system.

She would have to transport her soldiers, trucks, tanks and heavy guns through an unnavigable lake only a few inches deep, a lake strewn with mines, intersected by a maze of invisible canals, and defended from dry land by a valiant Dutch army that in relation to the area it has to defend is the largest military force in Europe.

Most informed people in Holland feel confident that the Dutch could repel a German invasion for at least a month. Dutch people are rarely confident without reason.

Holland is better prepared today than she has ever been before. During the past months pill boxes have sprung up like mushrooms in hundreds of places. Bomb shelters have been constructed in important cities. Citizens have been moved from many possible zones to districts in western Holland. One area on the inundation line has already been put under water. The Red Cross has given instruction on wartime emergencies to hundreds of Dutch women and girls. All of this has been done quietly, efficiently, without publicity—in true Dutch fashion.

It has been done not because the people fear invasion, but because they feel that being prepared for an undesirable event often prevents its occurrence.

2. If the Nazis, in spite of Dutch preparedness, were to invade Holland, throw staggering infantry forces against the water line, rain bombs upon the defenders, and penetrate into western Holland, they still might not gain their objectives. The part of Holland defended by the water line is also under-sea-level territory. Although it would not be inundated as an original defense measure it contains huge areas, reclaimed from inland lakes and rivers during the past three centuries, which once again could be put under water. Unquestionably, if necessity arose, the Dutch would destroy by water as the Finns have destroyed by fire.

And what would happen to the coveted Dutch ports and airfields? The island on which Flushing is located would have its dikes blown up, and the ocean would roll in to cover everything except the majestic sand dunes along the North Sea and the River Scheldt. Ships would be sunk in the Mass River so that Rotterdam would be blocked off from the sea. Amsterdam, if threatened, would be rendered useless as a port by the destruction of the locks of the ten mile North Sea Canal which connects that city with the ocean. The airports, many of them situated on former lake bottoms, would be again covered with water or blown up by dynamite.

There is one circumstance under which this destruction would be unnecessary: if Allied troops were brought into western Holland to check the Germans. But that would be as bad for the Nazis as opening up their Westwall. Then they might swiftly become the attacked instead of the attackers. An additional two hundred miles of relatively weakly fortified border would be theirs to defend. Emden, Bremen, the Kiel Canal and the Ruhr district would be easily accessible targets for French and British bombers.

The Dutch know—and the Germans surely know—that a blitzkrieg against watchful, mobilized Holland can never succeed. Only a totally successful blitzkrieg could interest the Germans, for a half-successful invasion would be worse than none: therein lies Holland's greatest chance for remaining unmolested by Germany.

3. There is still another possible reason why the Germans will not violate Dutch neutrality: they may not want to. Repeatedly they have affirmed that they do not plan to invade Holland, and that rumors crediting them with such intentions are but Allied propaganda. Few people have believed these affirmations, but that is perhaps unwise.

Actually a neutral Holland is a great protection to Germany. It is the Allies who are being hindered by the fact that the Dutch are stubborn enough not to want their country to become the battleground for other nations. Holland shields Germany's most vulnerable flank and blocks England's most direct route to Berlin. Honest Britons will admit it.

Perhaps that is why London merchants were telling Dutch business acquaintances a year ago that they'd better "do their part" in the "next war" if they hoped to maintain old trade relationships after it. Perhaps that is why Winston Churchill has been so eager to proffer his unctuous advice to the neutrals.

It is not beyond the realm of possibility that the Low Country scares of which we have read so much in our press since last September have been engineered by a subtle English propaganda machine desirous of intensifying world opinion against Nazidom and using for its purposes a pump which Germany's World War invasion of Belgium has already primed.

The Dutch realize that they may be faced with more difficult problems than relations with Germany. All along they have known that if war came their neutrality would become a pawn on the chessboard of power politics. As an Amsterdam business man said to the writer a year ago: "Holland must always act on the assumption that no big European nation is its benevolent friend. In the event of war we will have just as much to fear from England's trying to force us into the conflict as from Germany's invading us."

Temporarily Holland is safe on both fronts. Its perfected defense system will protect it from Nazi troops on the east. Its astute Queen and able ministers will guard it against British invitatons to belligerency on the west.

The Dutch inundation system is interesting but frequently misrepresented. All too often the impression has been given that if Holland were attacked Queen Wilhelmina could press a button at the Royal Palace in The Hague and central Holland would become a ten-feet-deep sea of swirling water. That is a dramatic but highly fantastic idea.

Forty per cent of Holland is below the level of rivers and of the sea at high tide. These low-lying areas, however, do not form a huge basin which could be flooded by the blowing up of a few dikes, or even a hundred dikes. On the contrary, the low regions are made up of scores and scores of polders, dike-surrounded fields that have been reclaimed one at a time from the ocean, rivers, lakes and marshes.

Since every polder has its own water level and is shut off by its own dikes, every polder that lies on the inundation line stretching from Muiden on Ijssel Lake southward through central Holland would have to be flooded separately. Therein lies the virtue of the Dutch water defense system: it can be controlled.

The Dutch would not be called upon to blow up dikes indiscriminately and let the water flow where it might. They could bring the water to any desired polders in their lowlying districts and, since most of the water would come from the wellstored Ijssel Lake, to any desired height. A few inches of water on top of the polders, however, are all the Dutch desire.

Much of the flooding would be accomplished not by blowing up dikes but by opening sluice gates. The lowest polders would be covered with water from higher ones adjacent to them, these in turn with water from still higher polders or nearby rivers. So important are the complete details that at any Army Exhibition staged by the Dutch General Staff at The Hague last summer machine guns, anti-aircraft guns, tanks, truck corps, and entrenchments were shown to the public and explained—but no information was given out on inundation methods.

Despite the fact that this water defense inevitably enters into every discussion about Holland's relation to the war, that country is made secure by a much more important weapon—the character of its people.

The Netherlands, contrary to popular belief, is not a homogenous nation. Netherlanders are by nature strongly individualistic. In times of peace they oppose each other constantly and bittery through fifty different religious sects, more than thirty different political parties, Cities rival cities, as do Amsterdam and The Hague. Provincial capitals and surrounding rural districts antagonize each other, as do Groningen, the city, and Groningen, the province.

Even in language there is no unity. A shopkeeper in Leiden speaks differently from a shopkeeper in Rotterdam. A farmer in Brabant has a different accent than a farmer in North Holland. In Friesland the people speak two languages: Dutch, in their own fashion, and a cherished Frisian tongue that can be understood even in some parts of southern Russia. All of these diversities in an area one two-hundred-and-fiftieth the size of the United States, or approximately the size of Maryland!

One thing, however, joins all Dutch people together, an inherent love of freedom—political freedom, religious freedom, freedom (if you will) to fight among themselves. For this the rugged Batavians, original inhabitants of the Rhine delta (today Holland's orchard country), finally drove out their Roman conquerors. For this the men, women and chidren of Haarlem, Leiden, Alkmaar fought side by side on the walls of their cities in the sixteenth century, resisting the siege of cruel, redoubtable Spanish troops under the Duke of Alva. For this they went without food, ate the rats out of the canals, the leaves off the trees—and finally broke their river dikes to flood the enemy out of the country. For this, Dutch troops fought against Napoleon at Waterloo.

Whenever their freedom is threatened the Dutch people lay aside their individual differences, forget dogmas, ignore conflicting ideologies and stand in unified loyalty behind their leaders.

Thus in 1935, when Europe was at peace, the anti-House-of-Orange Dutch Nazi party was able to obtain 8 per cent of the votes cast at the national elections. Last year, with Europe on the verge of war, and Holland the alleged first objective of a powerful German military machine, the same party polled only 4 per cent of the votes.

On election day the writer spoke with a member of the dwindling Dutch National Socialist party, a man who kept two portraits of Hitler in his home, none of Queen Wilhelmina. Even after Germany's absorption of Czecho-Slovakia he had proclaimed himself to be a Nazi sympathizer. But when asked what his feelings would be if Hitler's troops should invade Holland he replied without hesitation: "I would be the first Dutchman on the border—to shoot east."

SPAIN HOLDS KEY TO AIR ROUTES TO U.S.

War Helping Her Become Chief Junction with European Cities

N.Y. Times

MADRID, The Spanish Government, profiting from the disorganization of air routes as a result of the European war, is on the point of making Spain the most important junction of the services connecting the United States and Western and Central Europe.

Two factors—Spain's position at the Southwestern tip of Europe and Pan American Airways' terminus at Lisbon, Portugal—have made possible this development, with the result that Italians, Germans, Swiss, Netherlanders, British and French have all been active seeking permission to establish feeder routes through Spain. In addition, American Export Airlines, planning to establish a new service from New York to Rome, seeks to use Cadiz or some other Spanish port as a base.

Spanish Government authorities are anxious to obtain the maximum advantage for Spain's own airline, Iberia, with the result that after months of negotiation the picture is only now beginning to take on definite outlines.

TO WORK WITH ITALIANS

First in importance for Spain is the air convention signed a few days ago with Italy. Under it Iberia and Italy's Ala Littoria collaborate in estalishing a feeder service between Lisbon and Genoa, Italy. Ala Littoria hitherto has had a monopoly line from Italy as far as Barcelona.

Second, under a Spanish convention with Switzerland, Swiss Air has just established a new service between Locarno, Switzerland, and Barcelona, with America-bound passengers and mail continuing in Spanish or Italian planes.

Third, British Airways has just obtained permission to fly over Spain by way of Salamanca on a new route between Southampton, England, and Lisbon, using Bordeaux, France, as an intermediate base. The British service, which is due to start next Monday, will not provide landings in Spain, however.

Fourth, the French are negotiating with Spain for permission to revive Air France's old service to West Africa by way of Barcelona and Alicante, Spain.

Thus far, however, the Spanish authorities have refused to give the Netherland K. L. M. line landing rights for a new freight and mail service between Amsterdam, the Netherlands and Lisbon that started this week. As France has also refused, K. L. M. will have to keep outside the territorial waters of both countries and fly non-stop. K. L. M., it is understood, plans to extend the line this Summer by way of the Cape Verde Islands to Netherland possessions in South America.

GERMAN DEAL IS FOR FUTURE

As for the Germans, it is not believed that the air convention signed yesterday with Spain will be of much immediate importance. Plans have been under consideration whereby Iberia would pool operation of the service between Italy and Lisbon with Ala Littoria and the German Lufthansa, with Iberia putting up 75 per cent of the capital and the Germans and the Italians 12½ per cent each. However, as far as is known, the new convention is aimed principally at facilitating service between Locarno, the eastern terminus of Swiss Air, and some point in Germany.

As for American Export Airlines, landing rights in Spain were obtained several months ago, and service between New York and Rome was supposed to start last month. However, various complications, including the line's failure so far to obtain a license of convenience and necessity, have delayed it.

KEYNES HAS A PLAN TO SOLVE BRITAIN'S WARTIME FINANCING

Advocates System of Compulsory Savings, Family Allowances and Cheap 'Iron Ration'

By J. EMLYN WILLIAMS

Christian Science Monitor

Warfare has long been recognized as largely a matter of proper financing and modern warfare more so than ever, because of the colossal expenditure involved; and because of the millions of human beings whose welfare is affected both during the hostilities and afterward by whatever policy the belligerent may adopt.

This is particularly so in democracies, which must consult the general population through Parliament and continue to pursue the policy of distributing financial burdens as fairly as possible between the various sections of the community.

During January and February, 1940, Britain's expenditure was at the rate of £2,400,000,000 a year. Experts estimate that this colossal figure will be further increased as the war continues. In considering how to shoulder such a heavy burden, first thoughts naturally turn to the position in the World War of 1914-18; but it is clear that today's position is more difficult for Britain. Thus the present war is costlier because of the greater mechanization; Britain has not today the foreign exchange resources in the form of investments abroad which it then had, and the probability of obtaining loans from the United States as it did 25 years ago has been ruled out. Under such conditions, Britain must rely more than ever upon its own resources.

DIFFICULT PROBLEM

But, under any conditions, war financing is a problem of fundamental importance and difficulty. Whatever the moral justification for a particular war economically, it is a catastrophe involving tremendous waste of human achievement and energy. War is a condition wherein man-power and materials are turned from making productive things, mostly for immediate consumption, to making weapons of destruction like cannons, bombing airplanes, etc., which make no direct contribution to the normal needs of the community. Such products which are not themselves consumable do not help to produce other consumable goods; and as the war continues and such products have increased, the diversion to unproductive work of a larger number of the population also increases, since the criterion is not profitableness, or employment, but how can the Nation obtain the maximum number of trained men and weapons so as to overcome the enemy.

But while the earning capacity of a large number of these workers has increased with the war, the very things upon which these earnings would normally have been spent decreased. Increased demand and decreased supply results in scarcity and higher prices. Unless, therefore, greater supply is forthcoming or the demand becomes less, the way is open to serious attack upon the basis of a national economy that is open to inflation.

The situation, naturally, has been realized from the beginning of the war and various methods have already been adopted to solve it. Among them were the realization of foreign securities, increased taxation, and a campaign for voluntary saving for the period of the war. This, John Maynard Keynes, one of England's leading economists, proposes, shall be done through a system of compulsory savings, family allowances, and the creation of a cheap "iron ration."

Theoretically, the Government might obtain all the necessary moneys through increased taxation, particularly by lowering the present income tax level of £125 pounds a year. This would reduce the purchasing power of wage earners, who consume by far the largest percentage of national goods and who benefit through an extension of working hours to earn more wages. But this would mean in many cases taking from those who already have not enough to live on decently, and since the consumable goods they would want to buy could be had only in restricted quantities, prices would rise.

The consequence would be the beginning again of the vicious spiral of wage and price increases, from which neither worker nor state would benefit.

The 1914-17 cost of living rose from 100 to 180 units, but wages rose from 100 to 140. So the purchasing power of real wages was reduced by 20 per cent.

DEFERRED SAVINGS

Yet the worker must compensate for extra work done during wartime, and therefore Mr. Keynes proposes that this compensation should be paid to him in the form of "deffered savings."

These would be deductions from wages which would be allowed to accumulate until after the war, and be paid out at such a time and in such a way as to avoid or restrict any postwar slump—though the savings would be available always for special emergencies. As guarantee that these savings are not veiled taxation, and some Government device to rob the worker, Mr. Keynes suggests that such savings be deposited, not in Government institutions like post offices, but with trade unions, friendly societies, etc. Further, he lays down that such savings should not count in the means test in any postwar slump, and that the Government should guarantee that eventual repayment would come from postwar capital levy or capital tax. Men serving with the forces would also have a schedule of war bonuses kept back until after the war. If the workers accepted this plan, then automatically they would not agitate through strikes for higher wages during the war period.

Simultaneously, the Government must provide a minimum ration of essential consumption goods at a low price for all. The number of goods included in this "iron ration" is not stated, but it is assumed that it would be very limited and confined to such basic needs as bread, milk, edible fats, sugar, etc. Such a measure would be possible only through Government subsidy as at present.

The Keynes plan also includes the granting of family allowances at the rate of five shillings per child under 15 years throughout the community. Such an innovation, it is estimated, would cost £100,000,000 annually, and it seems remarkable that such a large item of expenditure should be included when the emphasis is upon less spending. This, however, is clear proof that the Keynes plan is not merely a means of supplying funds to finance the war but also a definite move toward greater economic equality by the establishment of a fiscal policy on the foundation of social justice and efficiency.

For the fact is that Great Britain is fighting not only a military war against Germany, but simultaneously is continuing its development of social progress. While on the one hand it is generally agreed that the uncontrolled rises in prices and wages of the World War shall not again occur, since it helped only the profiteer, on the other hand it is realized that great sacrifices are essential to meet the colossal expenditure involved.

Today, more than ever, the question is being asked in many circles in England that if Great Britain accepts man-power conscription so as to defend its democracy, how can it reject conscription of wealth, especially if inflation and totalitarian regimentation are the alternatives? Or, in other language, it is being said that "pocket or pantry must be raided," and democratic justice can hardly raid the latter before the former.

PLAN SAID UNRIVALED

John Maynard Keynes's plan is declared by many experts to be unrivaled. No other carries less financial difficulties or more social justice. He is world famous as the author of "The Economic Consequences of the Peace," written after the World War. Regarding his own plan and Great Britain's colossal expenditure, he declares that "the fault of my plan is that it gives not too much but too little. It may look, a year hence to be but a feeble beginning for a heavy task."

The Government and all sections of the community are now faced with the problem of either accepting this plan or producing a better one.

ROOSEVELT DENIES FARLEY OPPOSITION

Story Made of Whole Cloth, He Says of Reported Stand Against Naming Catholic

N.Y. Times

WASHINGTON—President Roosevelt, again refusing to throw any light on his political plans, stated recently that he had never discussed the third-term question with any member of Congress and denied ever expressing opposition to James A. Farley as a candidate for the Vice-Presidency because the Postmaster General is a Roman Catholic.

Praising a recent public address by Mr. Farley on the subject of religious tolerance, the President said he had been in a quandary over what he should do about a published article by a Washington columnist who quoted him as having told an unnamed Southern member of Congress that if Mr. Farley ran on the same ticket with Secretary Hull, Southerners would say the latter was "a stalking horse for the Pope."

The article, written by Ernest K. Lindley, one of the President's biographers, said that Mr. Roosevelt told a Democratic member of Congress he would not seek a third term unless the development of a "grave emergency" growing out of the European war made it appear that he was running away from his duty. The President was quoted as saying that barring such a development he would retire to his Hyde Park home at the close of his present term.

SAYS DENIAL BREAKS A RULE

The reason for his quandary, said the President, was that for seven years he had made it a rule not to comment on the writings of newspaper columnists. Once he started the practice, there would be no end of it and he would have to hold a press conference everyday just to answer questions about statements appearing in the columns, Mr. Roosevelt explained.

Without explaining his reasons for departing from the rule in the case of the Lindley article, the President then said he had never made the statement about Mr. Farley that had been attributed to him, that he had never said anything of that general nature, and that the entire article had been made out of whole cloth.

The President recalled that he had answered a request for comment on the Lindley article at his last press conference with the statement that he had not read it. Today he said that response was literally true, although he read the story later.

His silence on the article had been construed by some columnists, Mr. Roosevelt continued, as giving it an authenticity intended by the White House. It was situations such as these that made it difficult for him to live up to the rule against commenting on any newspaper stories except those coming under the category of what he termed straight news.

LINDLEY ISSUES A STATEMENT

In a statement replying to the President's denial, Mr. Lindley said:

"It is the privilege of the President to confirm, ignore or deny any newspaper column or story.

"The column to which the President referred today was published in The Washington Post of March 4 and in other newspapers to which my column is syndicated. It was a piece of straight reporting of information which came to me from sources whose reliability I have no reason to doubt. Within 24 hours after its publication I received word from several Democratic politicians confirming its substance and expressing the fear that they might be 'on the spot' at the White House for having talked 'out of school.'

"One passage in the column was seized upon by opponents of the President to impute to him a sense of religious prejudice. Such an insinuation is, of course, utterly unwarranted. As everybody knows, and as I wrote in a subsequent column, 'there isn't a molecule of religious prejudice in the President' and 'no public man in our history probably has done as much as Roosevelt to override and stamp out religious prejudice.'

"Any insinuation to the contrary must be keenly resented by the President and his friends and cannot be too vigorously repudiated."

U.S. THINKS IT HAS BEST SWIM TEAM

Coaches Are Unhappy Olympic Games Not Being Held This Year

Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK, April 8—This may sound slightly off, but America's swimming coaches are unhappy because this country boasts the finest collection of splashers and divers put together in 12 years.

It seems that ever since the 1923 Olympics, the United States' tank forces have been eating the flying spray the Japanese kicked up every four years. Oh, certainly, the U. S. outscored Japan on an unofficial point basis in Berlin in '36, but this was largely on a sweep in the diving, where the orientals admit they're outclassed.

POWERFUL CREW

So, along came 1939 and '40 and up popped a well-balanced, powerful crew of water churners—a squad that this country's coaching masters tell you is just about the strongest the U. S. ever had on tap for an Olympic year. But now the Olympics won't be held, and that table-turning the boys were just about tasting, won't be served at all.

This is the picture painted by the Olympic swimming bosses here this week end while taking in the National indoor A. A. U. championships. Fellows like Bob Kiphuth, the U. S. team coach four years ago; Fred Cady of Los Angeles, the diving coach, and Larry Johnson of Boston, the National A.A.U. swimming chairman were on hand while the University of Michigan came in with the team title Saturday night and Adolph Kiefer cracked another world backstroke record. Afterward, they were convinced the folks "ain't seen nuthin'" like the team that could be put together right now.

For instance, there are two free-style sprinters as fine as ever plopped into a tank in Gus Sharmet, the National Collegiate Champion from Hamtramck and the University of Michigan. He was favored to take the 100-yard event Saturday night, but young Otto Jaretz, an 18-year-old Chicago prep-schooler, beat him out, adding the indoor crown to his outdoor title.

ALL GOOD PROSPECTS

In fact, every one of the individual champions crowned during the two-day indoor meet would be a cinch to make an Olympic team, the coaches feel.

These were Tom Haynie, the Detroit and ex-Michigan free-styler, who won 220 and 440 yards; Kiefer, ex-University of Texas ace, now representing the Chicago Towers Club, in the 150-yard backstroke and 300-yard medley; Dick Hough, Princeton graduate, in the 220-yard breaststroke; and Al Patnik, Ohio State's great flip-flopper, who held onto both the low and high-board diving crowns. Michigan won the 400-yard freestyle relay and Princeton took the 300-yard medley relay, in which Kiefer, swimming the backstroke leg, chalked up a world mark of 57.9 for 100 yards over a 25-yard pool.

STANDOUTS

An Olympic team right now, the coaches say, would find the following fellows as standouts:

100-meter—Jaretz, Sharemet, Paul Wolf of Southern California.

400-meter—Haynie, Ralph Flanagan, who didn't make this year's A.A.U. meet because of business, and the Hawaiian, Kiyoshi Nakama.

1,500-meter—Flanagan, Nakama and Jim Tanaka, another Hawaiian.

Backstroke—Kiefer, Mark Follansbee of Princeton, who was second in Saturday night's event, and Al Vande Weghe of Princeton, who finished third.

Breaststroke—Hough. John Higgins of Ohio State, second to Hough in the week-end competition and Jim Skinner of Ann Arbor, Mich., who was third.

Springboard diving—Patnik, his Ohio State teammate, Earl Clark, and Sammy Lee, of Los Angeles.

Platform diving—Clark, who was second to Patnik; Lee and Norman Sper, 14-year-old Los Angeles sensation.

Relay—Andy Clark of Wayne University, collegiate quarter-mile champion; Howie Johnson of Yale, collegiate 220-yard boss; John Macionis of Philadelphia, third to Haynie last night; Jim Welsh of Michigan and the Hawaiian, Takashi Hirosi.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS WAR LEADER DEMANDS PEACE AND PREPAREDNESS

MacArthur Thinks Adequate Defense Makes Invasion Economically Unsound

The approach of Philippine independence from the United States combined with Japan's attempt to establish a new order in the Far East directly concerns United States Far Eastern foreign policy. To make a study of the economic, political, and social issues in the Philippine Islands, The Christian Science Monitor has sent its chief Far Eastern correspondent to Manila. Here is another of a group of stories based on his study.

By RANDALL GOULD

Christian Science Monitor

MANILA—Through one of those seeming contradictions in which the present Philippines situation abounds, the most forceful talk for peace encountered anywhere here came from the lips of a worldfamed fighting man.

He was General Douglas MacArthur, Field Marshal of the new Philippine army and former Chief of Staff of the United States Army. A husky but trim-figured man in tropical white, looking many years less than his actual age, General MacArthur strode back and forth past the Philippine and American flags in his office and declared war to be a confession of failure on the part of leaders.

The Philippines is building up a military machine which is almost unique in that it cannot by any conceivable stretch of imagination be construed, as designed for anything but defense, he said. Others say this but clearly mean otherwise; the Filipinos have neither the power nor the inclination to go picking quarrels abroad, and what they are doing is to strive to make a quarrel with themselves thoroughly unprofitable and impractical.

This, it would seem, fits unprecisely with the views of the son of that other General MacArthur who consolidated America's position in the archipelago four decades ago and who, as military Governor, immediately preceded the first civil Governor. The senior MacArthur built for a peaceful Philippines after the havoc of war, and it appears that his son, with personal knowledge of war likewise, is vehemently for peace on every ground, including the fact that "in modern war there can be no economic winner."

There has been considerable misunderstanding of what was sought under the Philippine National Defense Plan. General MacArthur defines his terms crisply:

AN ISLAND SWITZERLAND

"The Philippine National Defense Plan intends to establish, here in the far reaches of the Pacific Ocean, an island Switzerland."

He sincerely believes, it is obvious, that this is not only possible but the only sensible thing from the standpoint of everyone concerned, which may be enlarged to take in a wide scope indeed. Even if others could take the Philippines easily, he feels, they might find ground for hesitation in doing so. If Japan might have the islands for the asking, for example, acceptance would only mean the creation of virtually two empires, separated by 1,500 miles of ocean, with the potentiality of a renewed China some day striking out from between. But of course such considerations hardly justify the assumption that in every quarter balanced considerations would forever prevail without any effort on the part of the Filipinos themselves—hence the defense plan.

Many times the story has been told of the interview between Manuel L. Quezon and General MacArthur, which caused the latter to relinquish his post of United States Chief of Staff and, as a general on the retired list, come to serve the new Philippines Commonwealth. General MacArthur volunteered the tale to set the record straight. President Quezon dropped in and with his customary blunt system of getting down to the "brass tacks" of a situation, asked:

"Are the Philippine Islands defensible?"

"I told him," related General MacArthur, "that such a point must be considered in a relative sense. It is utterly a myth to lay it down that one place is defensible, another is not. The whole thing depends upon the relative strength of the contending forces at a given point. We must consider any given problems in its own specific aspects, and considering the Philippine problem thus, it is plain that a proper plan makes the islands relatively defensible.

"In the Philippines circumstances of size, geography, national wealth and basic policy impose upon the defensive purpose definite limitations, so that the sole aim is protection—that is, to make effective a complete neutrality, which may or may not be aided by another country or become the object of international treaty. When others say 'defense' they may actually mean something else, but in the Philippines when they say 'defense' that is exactly what they mean.

"As to aggression by others, the very best insurance we can have is to erect so strong a defense mechanism that the cost of conquest would be beyond any economic justification.

RICHES CALLED EXAGGERATED

"The riches and potentialities of these islands have been greatly exaggerated. Malcolm's very sound estimate puts their total value at only $6,000,000,000. We hear much of gold output, for example, yet this amounts even now to only $40,000,000 a year of which probably not more than 12 per cent is profit. There is but a modest amount of iron, the output now being largely taken by Japan; there is no high-class coal, no gasoline, magnificent forests, but almost wholly soft woods. The Philippines are obviously not an industrial country. As to agriculture, the sugar industry is important now because of the American market, there is no rubber or cotton, the hemp is of course the best in the world, cocoanut output is diminishing in importance because of competitive products. All in all the islands' economic value would not warrant a major war.

'There is, in fact, no plausible reason for attack. Here dwell a peace-loving, democratic and hard-working people, isolated by hundreds of miles from irritating contacts. There exists no traditional enmity between the Filipinos and any other race. The location of the Philippines automatically insures, on the part of all great Powers, a serious concern in its political status. All trade routes from Europe to the western Pacific pass through or close to the islands; strategically their position is almost decisive in this area and their seizure by arbitrary force—which would involve an overseas expedition, always a difficult operation culminating in a defended shoreline attack which is the most hazardous operation in warfare—would create a world situation unpredictable in its seriousness and consequences.

"Study of basic considerations leads to the inescapable conclusion that the Philippines may achieve a respectable defense and enjoy a reasonable safety if it is prepared and determined to repel attacks."

When President Quezon and General MacArthur had their historic chat, there were 4,000 members of the Filipino Constabulary and 6,000 Philippine Scouts.

National defense had been a primary issue from the inauguration of the Philippine Commonwealth on November 15, 1935, and the first measure passed by the National Assembly was the National Defense Act establishing the Philippine Army with the President as Commander-in-Chief. It is notable that the Philippines Constitution explicitly declared that "The Philippines renounces war as an instrument of national policy . . ." while at the same time the Filipinos unquestioningly accepted conscription as a necessary instrument of their scheme of defense.

DEFENSE BURDEN ON PEOPLE

In the words of a booklet called "The Philippines," published by the National Information Office of the Department of the Interior:

"The responsibility for the defense of the country does not rest on a costly professional force, but on the people themselves. The Defense Plan does nothing more than to prescribe the methods and provide the means whereby the Filipinos can prepare themselves to exert their defensive power whenever necessary. This is to obviate the possibility of using the Army in aggressive action, as there is no plan to attain a more militaristic objective than the development of a defensive organization."

By provision of the plan, the Philippines was divided into 10 military districts, which are further subdivided into military provinces for the purpose of recruiting the national manpower of a nation of 16,000,000 persons, providing preparatory military training, executing the national mobilization plans, and supply the needs of the armed forces in peace and war. The Army consists of a regular force and a reserve, both predominantly land units. These are supported, as far as practicable, by an air force and a marine division known as the Off-shore Patrol. Existing harbor defense units, when finally evacuated by the American Army, will be maintained. While the plan makes provision for shore defense, clearly the resources of the archipelago do not allow for any early creation of anything which might be called a true navy. If Uncle Sam wants to collaborate in this matter there can be no question of this welcome, and the United States will retain its naval property

Without embarking too much into details, it may be said that the bulk of the Philippine Army is to be composed principally of the reserve force, consisting of able-bodied men between 21 and 50 who have been trained for military service, but there will be a small regular element of professional soldiers to be permanently maintained. Universal military service is a duty to the State and there is an annual conscription of young men who undergo intensive training, usually limited to 5½ months, with later weekend refresher courses. The total length of military obligation is 30 years. The ultimate strength of the professional element will be 930 officers and around 10,000 enlisted men.

During the first 10 years of operation of the National Defense Plan there will be total expenditure of $80,000,000 (U.S.), appropriated in equal annual installments, and after this 10-year period the Philippines will have 400,000 trained soldiers at a cost of $8,000,000 (U.S.) a year—the lowest cost (50 U.S. cents) per inhabitant for the national defense of any land.

All of which is designed to make these islands, in General MacArthur's words, "not a tempting and juicy morsel but a rugged citadel of militant freedom."

U.S. ENGINEERS PUT MORE WIRES IN SAME SPACE

Refined Insulation Adds 606 Strands in Tube of Underground Telephone Cable

By HERBERT B. NICHOLS

Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK — Telephone engineers earned a long feather for their caps when lead-covered cables were developed, enabling telephone wires to be laid underground instead of strung up on poles. If modern cities had to use poles, it would take about 70 rows of poles each carrying 60 wires, to take the place of a single cable.

That was not true a year ago. The change is brought about by the development of a cable that holds 4,242 wires in the same diameter that formerly held 3,636

The diameter of each wire is also the same as before, hence the feat of placing 606 more within the same girth is due to an improved technique of wire insulation invented by the Western Electric Company, which reduces the thickness of the insulation surrounding each strand. The decrease in each wire is only 3-1000th of an inch, but this tiny saving, repeated 3,636 times results in a total saving of space sufficient to afford room for the additional wires.

The streets of New York in the late 80's and early 90's were a maze of overhead wires; and if trouble arose then, what would it be like today, when under one street corner in the city there are 282 cables or 560,000 wires. A modern city would hardly be possible without the cable.

WHY OF EARTHQUAKE

A masterful publication of the geology of eastern Iran, resulting from studies commenced there in 1927 and continued in 1933, '37, and '38 by Frederick G. Clapp of New York appears in the Bulletin of the Geological Society of America. The thickness of the rocks in that region aggregates nearly 100,000 feet, according to Mr. Clapp, and strata range in age from possible pre-Cambrian to the present day.

He finds Cambrian rocks, those which contain the earliest forms of living organisms, in a single locality in south-central Iran, and not at all farther east and north. The vast Iranian plateau, a triangular arid area between the Elburz Mountains on the north and the Zagros on the southwest, is still in process of elevation, he says, calling attention to the recurrent earthquakes that rock the region.

WATER HAMMER STILLED

Houses now building, have as a rule, silent switches to control the lights in bedrooms and baths, yet these same houses tolerate a worse noise nuisance—water hammer.

Silently we flick the switch and turn on the water faucet, but when we turn it off again there frequently comes a banging or noisy screech that wakes the whole house. That's water hammer.

Prof. Lewis H. Kessler, of the University of Wisconsin hydraulic and sanitary engineering department, has devised a mechanical-pneumatic arrester, an accordion-like device filled with a mineral oil compound, which, when shaken, assumes a foamy form and absorbs all shock. It is attached to the water pipe.

RUST IN RETREAT

The use of stainless steel for ash-cans, stove pipes and "tin" whistles is announced by Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corporation, makers of Pluramelt, a new process steel, the lower cost of which extends the application of stainless steel to practically every field.

SYNTHETIC GEMS

The Russian Precious Stone Trust is today making synthetic gems in its Leningrad laboratory. According to Industrial and Engineering Chemistry a sapphire of 292 carats and a ruby of 250 carats have already been produced in the attempt to determine whether large synthetics could be made.

INDUSTRIAL GROWING PAINS SIGNAL REBIRTH OF GIANT, COMPLEX BRAZIL

So Says Armando d'Almeida, Brazilian Press Group Chief, Urging Closer Ties With U. S.

By ARMANDO D'ALMEIDA
Brazilian Press Association

Editor & Publisher

None of the world's younger countries offers social, political and economic investigators a field of study to compare with Brazil.

The vast range of its several zones or regions, the interspersed and varied methods of production—from the patriarchal to the capitalistic—the joining of areas ruled by a commercial economy with those where a simple economy of consumption prevails, give to the Brazilian scene a most varied and complex pattern.

LIKENED TO EARLY U.S.

Today Brazil is undergoing "growing pains," much like those the United States experienced in the two decades following the Civil War. For previously this rich land had been content to permit the foreign markets to set the values for its products. In other words, it had been dependent on external markets and thus, by continuing as a debtor country, had accepted without complaint the somewhat meager profit returns permitted by the creditor nations.

So long as the capital resources of the nation were insufficient for technical changes in equipment, it was but natural that its citizens appeared content to follow a line of least resistance, inherited from four centuries of feudal economic regime. Recent movements toward an awakening, however, have met with enthusiastic and courageous response from the citizenry.

The single fact that the leaders of the Government of the U.S. have expressed a great confidence in the future of the country by recently extending Brazil important credits has put to rout the few remaining champions of "things as they are."

This new movement toward a better economic self-sufficiency, however, is far from tending toward anything smacking of totalitarianism. Brazil, probably as much as any nation in the Western Hemisphere feels herself to be a neighbor-state of all nations on this side of the globe. If anything, she is turning to the ways of the Americas in protest against the single-mindedness of some of the older states of Europe.

Although Brazil is one of the largest areas of the world continuously occupied by a single race of people, through her ability to absorb new blood she has kept herself in the forefront ranks of the younger spirited nations. This she has done through an harmonious amalgamation of ethnic elements, diverse and supposedly incompatible, that has brought about a new tropical race. The feat was accomplished largely because of the absence of racial preconceptions and religious prejudices.

ITS MIXED POPULATION

Today Brazil is a nation springing from the aboriginal Indian, the African negro, the sturdy sons of Portugal with further additions from Italy, Germany, Poland and Spain.

Under this process a progressive whitening, or emergence of white-blood dominance has taken place. Government estimates show that the percentage of whites in the country today is approximately 51 per cent with 22 per cent mulattos, 11 per cent copper-colored, 14 per cent negroes and 2 per cent Indians.

The idea that progress in Brazil is exclusively due to the European immigrant is entirely false and fictitious. Comparison of the population figures with figures of foreigners admitted since the beginning of the immigrant influx, show that the immigrant entry was not more than 4,500,000 in Brazil, while in Argentina, with a general populace four times less, such entries totaled 7,000,000.

FOR HOME MANUFACTURIES

It is because natural wealth can be produced cheaply and efficiently that Brazil has awakened to the need of a greater development of her financial powers that she may take advantage of current demands and raise her standard of living.

As this program proceeds apace, it will be found that Brazil is not seeking self-sufficiency after the pattern of a Chinese-wall economy, but merely that she does not wish to be an "agrarian complement" of the industrialized nations. Knowing her own needs and her own abilities she wishes to do some manufacturing on her own account. And judging from the inquiries being made, there are no small number of industrialists who are eager to have a part in the new enterprises.

The economic policy of Brazil is nationalistic in the sense that it tends to that adopted by the U.S. in the 19th century, but it does not exclude trade with other nations.

The establishing of new industries in Brazil does not mean that the volume of trade between the U.S. and Brazil will be curtailed, just as happened with trade between U.S. and Great Britain after the war of independence. At that time the English thought that if the colonies (America) were allowed to manufacture, trade with England would suffer materially.

Brazil is today in the same position. Take, for example, a particular product which is now imported from Europe to the extent of approximately one million dollars yearly. Brazil has all the natural resources necessary to manufacture this product locally. If this were done, she would save a million dollars of exchange for purchasing from the U.S. other products which could not be manufactured there.

EXPORTS ARE LIFEBLOOD

All this is very little.

By comparison with industry in the U.S., Brazil's industry is small. But it shows the firm decision of the Brazillian Government to transform the country from a plain producer of raw material in an industrial nation. The road to success is long but the fact that the figures shown above are mounting uninterruptedly yearly gives the Brazilian courage to reach this aim.

Life in Brazil has been in many ways a reflection of external markets. In other words, if coffee brought a high price, then the land was prosperous, but whenever overproduction hit the world markets there was no counter-balancing means of income.

To understand the struggle which Brazil has undergone it is well to consider her history in exports. In the period 1821-1830, the beginning of Brazil's political existence, her exports were in percentages: Sugar, 30.1; cotton, 20.6; coffee, 18.4; hides and skins, 13.6; fuel, 2.5; cocoa, .5 and rubber, .1.

The later years show this change. In 1851 sugar was 21.2 per cent of the exports and from there slowly fell until in 1936 it was only nine-tenths of one per cent. On the other hand, coffee from 48.8 per cent in 1851 moved up to 65.9 per cent in the period 1931-1935 but fell back in 1936 to 45.5. The cotton exports have fluctuated widely being down from 20 per cent in earlier days to 2 per cent in the period 1911-1920, but coming back to 19.1 per cent in 1936.

THE NEW BRAZIL

In earlier years a state of mind existed among Brazil's leaders that has been termed the "assurance of our slave owning lords." In other words a conservatism had grown up which prevented even the trial of a new idea. Then in 1930 came the revolution and with it an awakening to the need of more modern thinking in meeting Brazil's modern problems.

Today there is no desire for radical reform, rather there is a determination to employ Brazil's great resources in developing a nation of a more balanced economy.

Thus, Brazil, truly is in a period of transition, her hands are busily engaged in new tasks, yet she finds time now to look about and to study the ways and the methods of her great neighbor in North America. She will continue, for all that, to produce those things for which she has won fame but at the same time will not hesitate, as opportunity now offers, to set up her home factories for those necessities which an awakening citizenry is demanding.

WHY DO YOU READ A BOOK?

U. S. Literary Critic Says to Refresh Oneself, Not to Tire You Out

Christian Science Monitor

BOSTON—"Reading should leave us refreshed—not exhausted," Mrs. David Hays, literary critic, told the New England Conference of the Division of Literature and Drama of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs, meeting in a luncheon session at the University Club recently.

Mrs. Hays, who is chairman of Literature for the New England Conference of Federated Women's Clubs, which will meet in Swampscott in September, spoke on the general subject of "What America Is Reading."

She took issue with the author of one of the books America is reading at present. Dr. Mortimer J. Adler, whose "How To Read a Book" is rapidly becoming a best seller, tells his readers that a good book should leave them exhausted.

Mrs. Hays said, "I think it should leave us refreshed."

Reading, Mrs. Hays observed, should be an adventure of enjoyment. It is for this reason, according to Mrs. Hays, that "How Green Was My Valley," by Richard Llewellyn, is enjoying so much publicity.

The setting in Wales gives the reader a sense of escape, she said, a requisite demand of the average reader, combined with excitement, heroism, and courage.

Mrs. Hays listed information, escape, and enjoyment as desires motivating the choice of books which America reads.

"These last are qualities," Mrs. Hays said, "which because we admire in those about us, we want to find in the characters who move through the books we read."

The thing to do, Mrs. Hays told the Conference, is not to be bewildered by the vast flow of books across the pages of the papers.

"One book at a time," Mr. Hays said, "fully savored will bring the reader the most lasting enjoyment."

"If the position of the poet in American life was ever in doubt Postmaster Farley has settled it categorically by proving by his latest issue of stamps that five poets are equal to five inventors or five scientists," David McCord, noted poet and author of five books of poetry, both light and serious, told the Conference.

Mr. McCord contrasted the state of the American poet in America and England. "Here in the United States we take our poets as they come. However, the American poet in England does not fare so well. The only well-known American poet in England," Mr. McCord said, "is Longfellow. This is all the more strange," Mr. McCord observed, "since it can be accurately said that the most vital things in modern poetry are being produced today in the United States rather than in Europe." Mr. McCord also read from his own poems.

REALISTIC VIEW OF NEW CHINA, NOT WISHFUL THINKING, NEEDED

Editor's Note—The following article, Japan's Economic Invasion Of China, by John E. Orchard, appeared in the April issue of "Foreign Affairs." Because it is so timely it is reproduced here in two installments, the first of which follows.

By JOHN E. ORCHARD

There is a great deal of wishful thinking concerning the outcome of the present Sino-Japanese conflict. Some observers insist that American economic and financial interests in China are not in danger because the Japanese Army can never really impose its will on that country. Others maintain that even the destruction of Chiang Kai-shek's National Government would not threaten American interests because Japan has neither the economic resources nor the technical ability to exploit the fruits of a military victory. Still another school of thought not only accepts the possibility of a Japanese victory but argues that it would bring positive benefits to American business by increasing American exports to a new China developed under Japanese control. It is my conviction—arrived at after several months spent last year in both the free and occupied parts of China, in Manchuria, and in Japan—that all such reasoning rests upon a number of false, or at least very questionable, assumptions and that we must make a more realistic appraisal of present developments in the Far East.

JAPAN MUST SUCCEED

It is by no means a foregone conclusion that Japan will be unable to carry through her plans for the conquest and pacification of a substantial part of China. Though Chiang may possibly keep the Japanese from making further large-scale advances, his armies do not appear to possess enough power to force their withdrawal. The Chinese may have ample equipment for defensive and guerrilla warfare, but they are deficient in the artillery and aircraft necessary for an offensive campaign. Free China has great difficulty in obtaining supplies from abroad, and her remaining lines of communication are, at best, very precarious.

If the Japanese Army is forced to withdraw, it will be (1) because China receives more help from third Powers than hitherto, or (2) because Japan is subjected to severe economic pressure by the Western Powers, or (3) because the Japanese themselves come to the conclusion that their economic structure will not longer support the burden of the military campaign. Though the last of these possibilities is often emphasized by Western observers, there are many reasons to doubt the imminence of so complete a change in Japanese policy. The military group would lose far too much in prestige by any such admission of failure, and even those industrial leaders, who at one time opposed the war, are now convinced that it must be carried through to victory, so dependent has the entire economic life of Japan come to be on success in China.

There are signs of economic strain in Japan; but the war has brought an apparent prosperity. The pressure of population in the rural areas has been relieved by mobilization and by the movement of labor into industry. There is a boom in heavy manufacturing; unemployment is not a problem; prices and the cost of living have advanced, but not as much as family money earnings. It is true that plenty of economic troubles are being piled up for the future—as huge internal debt, inflation of the currency, the prospect of runaway prices, over-expansion of industry—but where these dangers are appreciated they only strengthen the determination to push ahead in China. Everything has been staked on success.

DIFFICULTIES FACED

Foreign exchange is the weakest point in Japan's economy. She must import certain essential commodities—scrap steel, petroleum, raw wool, raw cotton, crude rubber, machine tools and other industrial equipment. Thus far the conquests on the mainland have failed to improve Japan's international trade position. Exports to the yen-bloc areas—Korea, Manchuria and North China—do not create foreign exchange, and those areas are not as yet supplying Japan, to any important extent, with the commodities she lacks. The commodity balance of trade with the countries outside the yen bloc continues to be adverse. In recent months, the payment of international balances has been a heavy drain upon Japan's limited gold supply. Her position is undoubtedly extremely vulnerable, and if the Western nations wish to exert pressure upon her they now can do so most effectively through her foreign trade.

If such pressure is not applied, the prospects are that the war will be protracted into a stalemate or that it will end in an undeclared peace during which Japan, through a puppet regime, will continue to pacify the areas she now occupies. There is the possibility that China, faced with a long struggle and deserted by other nations because of their preoccupation in Europe, might accept a compromise. At the present writing, Wang Ching-wei's projected Central Government of China seems to be completely discredited; nevertheless, there is evidence that his regime has received promises of support from influential Chinese, who dread a prolonged conflict or who object to the Communist associates of Chiang Kai-shek.

Events of recent weeks have also indicated the possibility that Japan, for the time being at least, desires to suspend the campaign for crushing Chiang Kai-shek and to concentrate all her resources on the consolidation of gains already made. The cost of establishing and maintaining order in the occuped areas has probably been exaggerated. Aided by airplanes and a mobile ground force, relatively few men would be needed, especially if they resorted to ruthless reprisals. The living expenses of the individual Japanese soldier are not great, and in any case China would be expected to contribute to the support of this "peace preservation army." A recent report estimates that the Japanese armies of occupation in North China are already deriving about 75 per cent of the cost of their upkeep from local sources. In Japan it is not felt that the maintenance of an army in China, even for an indefinite period, is too great a burden. It is looked upon rather as a means of avoiding unemployment and preventing a revival of social unrest in the rural areas.

JAPAN'S AIMS CLEAR

In the economic field there is little room for speculation concerning Japan's intentions in China. If Chinese resistance collapses, or if there is an undeclared peace, or if China accepts a compromise that leaves the Japanese a foothold on the mainland, Japan will carry through her plans for the economic development of China. And we may be certain that those plans call for the development of China in the exclusive interest of Japan. The Chinese will participate only in a minor capacity, and foreign enterprise will be either curtailed drastically or forced out completely. Any share of China's foreign trade which third Powers manage to retain will be on the sufferance of Japan and will be permitted simply because Japan herself cannot take care of it. Any foreign businessman who thinks that Japanese domination in China will bring him greater opportunities, or even a renewal of past opportunities, is blind to the record of Japanese expansion in other areas of Asia. The parts of China under Japanese control will become closed to foreign enterprise just as completely as Korea and Manchuria are closed to it today.

There need be no mystery concerning Japan's economic intentions in China, nor concerning the methods to be employed to effect them. The pattern of development and control has been established in Manchuria. In North and Central China, sufficient progress has been made to indicate that Japan's economic exploitation there is to be equally thoroughgoing and exclusive. It is true that Japan is short of the capital and equipment required to develop China and is in great need of foreign financial assistance. Japanese spokemen have indicated repeatedly that such assistance from abroad would be welcome only if it came in the form of loans and credits placed under the control of Japanese interests. If foreign capital is forthcoming under those terms, development will proceed rapidly; if there is no foreign assistance, the program may be retarded, but it will not be abandoned.

Japan's immediate goal in North China seems to be the production, for shipment to Japan proper, of a number of raw materials essential to industry—coal, iron ore, cotton, wool and salt. Though she had hoped to obtain these commodities from Manchuria, salt is the only one that has been shipped to Japan in substantial quantities. Most Manchurian iron ore is of low grade and cannot be transported economically over any distance. Manchuria's output of coal has risen since the Japanese occupation but the surplus for export to Japan has declined sharply because of increased consumption in Manchuria. The production of raw cotton is negligible, and cannot be expanded materially. The quality of the wool is unsatisfactory, and any improvement will require many years and a complete revolution in the Manchurian sheep industry.

SOURCE OF MATERIALS

China, especially North China, is richer than Manchuria in all these raw materials, and Japan's plans to develop them are therefore being pushed rapidly. The Lungyen iron ore deposit, on the border between Chahar and Hopei Provinces, is considered one of the most promising in all of China. It is said to contain 100 million tons of ore (with an iron content of from 52 to 60 per cent), an amount small in comparison with the Lake Superior or the Lorraine deposits, but much greater than the iron ore reserves of Japan proper. The development of the Lungyen deposit has begun, and the new mines produced most of the 78,000 tons of iron ore shipped to Japan from North China in 1938. It is still questionable whether ore can be transported economically from Lungyen to Japan on account of the long rail haul to the seaboard, the Japanese nevertheless plan to mine two million tons in 1941 and are completing vital rail connections between the mines and the Peking-Suiyuan Railway.

The Japanese have also taken over the iron ore deposits in Central China—properties at Tayeh on the Yangtze River below Hankow and the mines in Anhwei Province near Wuhu. The ore in both of these groups of deposits is of high grade, averaging 55 to 60 per cent in iron content, and the reserve is estimated at 200 million tons. While the fighting was still in progress along the Yangtze, the Japan Iron Manufacturing Company had engineers at Wuhu and Kiukiang ready to take over the operation of the Anhwei and Tapeh mines as soon as they should fall under Japanese military control. The stocks of ore at these mines (some 300,000 tons) and at Wuhu were seized immediately and shipped to Japan. Before the present war Japan was obtaining over a million tons of ore annually from the Yangtze valley, and the Tayeh and Anhwei mines have for some time been a major source of supply for the great Imperial Steel Works at Yawata. Now that these mines are under Japanese control, ore shipments to Japan will doubtless increase. New discoveries of iron ore in Central China were announced several years ago in connection with the plans of the Chinese Government to build an iron and steel plant somewhere along the Yangtze River. The Japanese now control the area where these deposits lie. Plans were also being made by the Kwangtung Provincial Government for the construction, near Canton, of an iron and steel plant to utilize the iron ores of South China. Japan is consolidating her occupation in this area too. All known iron ore deposits of any importance in China have thus passed under the control of Japan—a fact of considerable importance to a country seeking to become self-sufficient in a basic commodity.

COAL AND SALT

One of the serious industrial deficiencies in Japan has always been the scarcity of coal, particularly coking coal. North China contains one of the world's richest stores of coal, including coking coal in a number of deposits. A recent Japanese estimate puts the coal reserves of North China at 200 billion tons—some thirty times those of Japan proper. All the larger mines in North China, except those under foreign control, have been taken over and are being operated under Japanese management, though as yet these properties are not very productive, since time will be required to repair the destruction done by the retreating Chinese. The deposit with the greatest potentialities seems to be in the Tatung area of northern Shansi, now included in Inner Mongolia, where the reserves are tremendous. Though machinery has already been installed there for large-scale development, transportation presents a major problem still to be solved, for the gradient on the railway connecting Tatung with Tientsin is steep and the haulage is costly.

Coal has been shipped from North China to Japan in steadily increasing volume during recent years, the greater part of it coming from the mines of the Sino-British Kailan Mining Administration in Hopeh Province north of Tientsin. During 1939, 2.4 million tons of coal, practically all from North China, were shipped to Japan, whereas only one million tons were shipped during 1936. North China now sends more coal to Japan than does Manchuria, and the possibilities for further increase are also much greater.

Salt, an essential raw material in the Japanese chemical industry, is not produced in Japan proper in adequate quantities. To obtain the salt fields of northeast China has long been an objective of Japanese imperialism: salt was one of the reasons for the seizure of Shantung by Japan during the World War. By June 1939, the Chinese-owned salt refining plant at Tangku, at the mouth of the Hai Ho below Tientsin, was being operated under the direction of the Japanese Army. In August, the North China Salt Manufacturing Company was organized for the exploitation of the Changlu fields in Hopeh and of those in Shantung. Salt exports to Japan from China and Manchuria totaled 993,000 tons in 1938; by 1941, North China alone is expected to produce 2,100,000 tons, or four times the average production of Japan proper.

COTTON AND WOOL

China has long been an important producer of raw wool for world trade. The wool, though superior to that of Manchuria, is coarse and is usually classified in the trade as carpet wool. The United States was formerly the chief market for it, with Germany second and Japan a poor fourth. Japanese plans for obtaining wool from North China thus far has been a failure, due largely to the greed of the Japanese wool-purchasing monopoly, a guild composed of the large Japanese textile manufacturers to which the Japanese Army ordered that all Chinese wool must be sold. The guild fixed a low price and paid for the wool with notes of the newly-established puppet Federal Reserve Bank. It succeeded in obtaining the wool which had already been assembled at the trading points; but that, still in the hands of the producers disappeared into the interior perhaps into free China or into Outer Mongolia and Russia. As a result, China's total exports of wool in 1938 dropped to 3,800 metric tons, less than one-fourth of the average for the three previous years. The United States almost disappeared as a market. The amount exported to Japan increased substantially, though the wool was unsuited to Japanese needs. Germany, with whom Japan had barter agreements, took two-thirds of the total wool exports, though the quantity was smaller than the amount she had taken in previous years. In 1939, these monopoly practices were modified somewhat; yet wool exports continued to decline. Present Japanese plans call for the export of 50,000 tons of raw wool in 1941. Such a figure is fantastic, for China would then be the world's leading wool exporter, outranking even Australia. It will be hard to restore China's wool exports even to the normal level, for the unfair practices of the monopoly have destroyed the growers' confidence.

Raw cotton is Japan's largest import; cotton spinning and weaving form her leading manufacturing industry; cotton piece goods constitute her most important export. Raw cotton also comes first among the exports of the United States to Japan, and for that reason this country would be particularly interested in Japanese plans for developing new sources of supply. For many years Japan has sought to obtain cotton from territories under her own control, but without success. In Korea and Manchuria geographic and economic conditions do not favor an expansion of cotton cultivation. China holds considerably more promise. The present output of that country, however, does not meet Japan's needs in either quantity or quality, and the immediate results of the Japanese cotton-producing program there, have been disappointing. Before the present conflict, North China's cotton production amounted to about 40 per cent of Japan's consumption, though only a small part of the yield was actually exported to Japan. In 1936 less than 3 per cent of Japan's cotton imports came from China. In 1938 the percentage had risen to 17. But in 1939 there was a complete failure of the program, and China's cotton exports to Japan for the year dropped to 10 million pounds from the 212 million pounds for 1938. Unfavorable climatic conditions account in part for this decline; but the Chinese farmers had also failed to plant cotton, partly because they were unwilling to furnish supplies to Japan and partly because they could make more money by raising cereals. This setback to Japanese plans is probably temporary, for it is doubtful whether the Chinese farmers can continue to resist Japanese pressure to raise cotton. The system of "protected" and closely supervised villages is being introduced into North China from Manchuria, and, of more importance, farmers as near the margin of subsistence as those of China, cannot afford to give up raising an important money crop like cotton. The prospects are that North China can eventually supply Japan with a substantial part of the cotton now imported from the United States.

PROGRESS MADE

It is clear that Japan must still overcome serious difficulties before she can obtain from China sufficient iron ore, coal, salt, wool and cotton to meet all the needs of her industries. Some of her estimates of future output are extravagant and some of her plans are obviously impossible of fulfillment. Yet it would be shortsighted to conclude that her program, in its basic outline, cannot be carried out. Japan has already made much progress in exploiting China's raw materials for the benefit of Japanese industries, and there is every indication that she is aiming at nothing less than the complete engrossment of all of China's economic resources. It is estimated that Japanese immigrants in North China already number over 200,000, and new arrivals are pouring in at the rate of 10,000 a month. Guerrilla warfare is still troublesome, but in time North China may be pacified as completely as Manchuria. A portion of the Chinese population appears to be accepting the Japanese conquest, and there is no scarcity of cheap labor for Japanese enterprises.

REALISTIC VIEW OF NEW CHINA, NOT WISHFUL THINKING, NEEDED

Japanese economic exploitation in North China is in the hands of the North China Development Company, a huge semi-governmental corporation, established in November 1938 under Japanese law. It is capitalized at 350 million yen, of which the Japanese Government's share is 175 million. It has the blessing of the Japanese Army; indeed, the plans for its organization were made by the Army's economic advisers. A similar corporation, the Central China Development Company has also been proposed. Under the direct management of these large bodies subsidiary companies have been set up for the conduct of particular enterprises. Their capital is subscribed by the development companies, by Japanese capitalists, by the provisional Chinese Governments and, in theory at least, by Chinese capitalists.

Japanese capital is now taking a prominent part in the economic exploitation of China. This participation is in marked contrast with the attitude which the old established houses, like Mitsui and Mitsubishi, assumed toward the development of Manchuria: there they were reluctant to cooperate, perhaps because they considered the enterprises uneconomic, perhaps because they objected to the close control exercised by the Kwantung Army. The Japanese Army in China has adopted less rigid policy toward business. The opportunities open to Japanese capitalists have also been more attractive, for in many instances they have taken over going concerns belonging to the Chinese—such as mines, factories, transportation systems—at small expense, and are operating them with little outlay for new equipment. In some cases Japanese industrialists have been drawn up plans for exploiting certain areas in China months before the Army took them over. They have sent out survey parties to scour North, Central and South China to investigate economic possibilities. Mining experts have sometimes waited immediately behind the Japanese lines for the advance of the Army.

Given this active participation by Japanese business leaders in the China venture, it cannot be argued that they oppose it. Disputes between different agencies do occur from time to time; but the question at issue between them is the division of the spoils, not whether Japan should be in China.

The Japanese have followed set procedures in acquiring control over Chinese enteprises. In a few cases, limited to small concerns, the Chinese owners have been able to sell to Japanese. Chinese concerns in which there has been any participation by the government, either national or provincial, have been regarded as government enterprises by the Japanese, and on that pretext they have been confiscated and assigned to one of the puppet regimes. Privately-owned properties are first occupied by the Japanese Army, and operation is resumed only with the permission of the military authorities. The Japanese try to obtain the cooperation of Chinese owners in the formation of joint Sino-Japanese companies. The Chinese are expected to contribute their plant and equipment, while the Japanese furnish the working capital and the management. The controlling interest is Jaanese. In some instances the Chinese have agreed to cooperate on these terms. For example, some of the Chinese producers of raw silk participated in the organization of the Central China Silk Reeling Company by contributing their filatures. At first, the capitalization of the company was small, and the shares were held in equal parts by the Chinese and Japanese. Then the Japanese decided to increase the company's capitalization to eight million dollars (Chinese), of which they were to hold 75 per cent; and, when a dividend was distributed several months ago, the Chinese shareholders were informed that they would receive their portion only after the titles to their filatures had been turned over to the company.

In most cases, the Chinese owners have realized that cooperation means virtual confiscation, and they have therefore placed themselves beyond the reach of the Japanese, either in the International Settlement of Shanghai or in a foreign country. Many mills, the owners of which have disappeared, have been handed over by the Army to Japanese companies for operation. I was told in Osaka by the director of one of Japan's large textile groups that the Army had asked his company to operate a cotton mill in China. My informant said he did not intend to confiscate the mill, but that—until the owner could be found and persuaded to cooperate—his company would keep it going in order to provide employment for the Chinese workers. A pretense of legal transaction sometimes covers the seizure of Chinese enterprises. For example, early in the spring of 1939 it was announced by the Japanese that after long negotiations the Yungli Chemical Industries, Ltd., had agreed to the transfer of their properties at Tangku and Pukow to Japanese interests; yet in June the Yungli Company was still running a notice in the newspapers of Shanghai stating that the Tangku and Pukow factories belonged to them and denying any claims of "those who may take advantage of the present disturbance in encroaching upon such plants, irrespective of their nationalities."

In numerous instances, mills have been taken over by the Japanese and operated until their stocks of raw materials have become exhausted. Other factories have been seized and the equipment removed to Japanese plants. Many mills have escaped seizure only by transfering their titles to foreign ownership. Some remain idle because vital parts of the equipment have been removed or destroyed and because the Japanese are unwilling to expend any capital on replacements since their claim to the property rests only upon the consent of the Japanese Army, and ultimately upon a Japanese victory. And lastly, a small part of China's industrial equipment has been carried into the interior and reerected in territory still under Chinese control.

Japan's absorption of China's economic resources and activities has thus been complete wherever the Japanese Army has established its control. And there has been much ot absorb, for in the decade prior to the war China had made amazing progress in developing her manufacturing industries and in creating modern means of communication. Every enterprise of any importance in the occupied areas—transportation systems, power plants, mines, factories—has now passed into Japanese hands; only the petty establishments, the workshops and retail stores have escaped. The electric power field, for instance, is completely dominated by Japanese interests. The coal mines of North China are being parceled out by the North China Development Company to Japanese firms—subsidiaries of Mitsubishi, Kaijima, Mitsui, Okura and Meiji Mining; and the important Tatung field is to be exploited by a newly organized company with capital subscribed by the North China Development Company, the North China Transportation Company and the South Manchuria Railway. All the ships of the China Merchant Steam Navigation Company have been seized. Control over the 50 flour mills of North China, originally Chinese, has been put under Sino-Japanese management. Some of them are still controlled by the Army, others have been turned over to the three big Japanese flour interests for operation. The Chinese supply the plant and equipment, the Japanese the working capital, while control is to be divided on the basis of 40 percent for the Chinese and 60 per cent for the Japanese. A match syndicate with headquarters in Tientsin has absorbed the Chinese match factories of North China, and if present plans carry through, will eventually include the match factories of Central China.

Practically all of China's limited blast furnace capacity has passed under Japanese management. The 250-ton furnace at Shichingshan near Peking, completed by a Chinese company in 1922 but never operated, was blown in on November 20, 1938, under the temporary management of the Japan Iron Manufacturing Company, and is now turning out about 150 tons of pig iron a day. The Okura interests will work the iron deposits and operate the small blast furnaces in Shansi. The furnaces at Tayeh are in the hands of the Japan Iron Manufacturing Company; but they are badly damaged, and it is likely that most of the ore will be shipped to Japan. In recent years, a number of modern cement mills have been built in various parts of China; of these only a small plant in Szechwan and one in Kwangsi now remain in the full possession of the Chinese. The plant in Canton and one in Shansi have been handed over to the Asano interests; the others are, or will shortly become, joint Sino-Japanese enterprises.

Cotton Spinning and weaving is probably the most important factory industry of China, and more private Chinese capital is invested in it than in any other. Yet only a few cotton mills outside the International Settlement of Shanghai remain in the hands of the Chinese owners. Mills in occupied territory have been assigned by the Army to Japanese companies. I was told last summer by leaders in the Chinese cotton textile industry that only one small Chinese mill had agreed to cooperate; all the others had been taken over without consent of the owners.

Not content merely to take over Chinese concerns, the Japanese have also invested some of their own capital in new construction in China. They have done this partly to escape the restrictions placed on manufacturing industries in Japan, and partly as a safeguard against inflation at home. Along both banks of the Hai Ho below Tientsin, new Japanese factories now stretch for miles. They include chemical works, cigarette factories, textile plants and a paper mill. The president of the Kanegafuchi Spinning and Weaving Company has repeatedly advocated the removal of Japan's entire cotton manufacturing industry to China in order to utilize the latter's raw materials and cheap labor.

Up to the present, non-Japanese foreign interests have fared little better in the occupied areas than have the Chinese. For the principle of the Open Door is being violated flagrantly. Treaty rights have been violated. Plants have been seized, and in some cases held for months. The Japanese Army has closed Chinese rivers to foreign shipping on the pretext of military necessity, and no faith can be placed in their recent promises to open such streams as the Yangtze. As Japan's position in China becomes more secure, foreign interests must expect further restrictions upon their activities.

It is in trade that foreign business has been put under the most serious restrictions. In July 1939, the Japanese-sponsored Peiping Government extended its export control in North China to all except a few unimportant commodities. Under the regulations now in force export permits are granted only if the foreign exchange to cover the proceeds from the export is first turned into the Yokohama Specie Bank for conversion at the official rate of 23, 7-16 cents (U.S.) per dollar in Federal Reserve Bank notes (the Federal Reserve dollar is at par with the Japanese yen). Last summer, it was possible to purchase the Federal Reserve dollars in the black market in Tientsin at nine or ten to the United States dollar, whereas the official rate was 3.6. Under such stringent control, it has become difficult, if not impossible, for any except Japanese concerns to engage in the export trade. Imports into China from countries other than Japan are likewise subject to arbitrary tariff revisions and exchange controls. Such trade regulations are now being extended to Central China, though the existence of the International Settlement at Shanghai still impedes their enforcement in that area.

The New Order in East Asia is a vague phrase as it is used by the Japanese but events in China have made its meaning clear. Substantial parts of the country have been occupied by Japan; a puppet government is being established with Japanese in key positions; all major economic activities are being absorbed by Japanese interests; the rights of third Powers are being ignored; and foreign business is being eliminated through intolerable restrictions. The Far Eastern policies of the Western Powers should be shaped by these developments—and not by the hope of a Chinese military victory or of a Japanese economic collapse, or by the expectation of sharing in the fruits of a Japanese victory.

BRITAIN'S GREAT AIR LINES MERGE TO AVERT LOSING TRADE TO NAZIS

N.Y. Herald Tribune

In an effort to forestall the decline of Britain's civil aviation, the Empire's two great air transport systems, Imperial Airways and British Airways, Ltd., have just been merged into British Overseas Airways, which expects to begin running a trans-Atlantic service to Canada and the United States in June.

Since the beginning of the war Britain's commercial aviation companies have been starved for equipment, as all factories have been concentrating on military models. Despite this lack, British aircraft manufacturers have fought every attempt to purchase commercial planes in the United States. But after seeing Germany extending air routes through the Balkans and to Russia during the last six months in the face of the pressure of war, officials of the British companies went ahead and purchased a fleet of American-built Lockheeds, and more than 100 1,1000-horsepower engines from the Wright Aeronautical Corporation.

The new corporation, which is government-subsidized but controlled by its own board of managers, who are not civil servants, will use American equipment in its future operations. All profit the company makes will go to its stockholders, but the British government will make up any deficits.

Making up the governing body of British Overseas Airways are a group of aviation leaders, including Clive Pearson, chairman; Irvine Geddes, deputy chairman; W. L. Runciman, director general and chief executive member, and Harold Brown and Gerard d'Erlanger. Under Mr. Runciman are two assistant directors general, one of whom is responsible for the territories extending east of England, and the other for those extending west. There will be eight departments in the new corporation: administration, finance, public relations, traffic, operation, service, engineering, and accounts and technical development.

In the United States the corporation will be represented through two operating companies, Imperial Airways Bermuda, Ltd., and Imperial Airways Atlantic, Ltd., managed by Paul E. Bewshea. According to Mr. Bewshea, the Bermuda service will be resumed as soon as suitable equipment is obtained.

It was learned that the trans-Atlantic service would be started with the flying boats Cabot and Caribou, which were used in survey trips between Eire, Newfoundland and Canada last summer. At first only mail and express packages will be carried on the trans-Atlantic route, but later the company expects to carry passengers in three new flying boats completed just before the war began—the Golden Hind, the Golden Horn and the Golden Fleece—which are slightly smaller than Pan American Airways' clippers.

Under an arrangement with the British government, Overseas Airways Corporation is operating national air communications for the Air Ministry. It provides two services weekly from the United Kingdom to Australia, four services weekly to India, one weekly to South Africa, two weekly to central Africa, one weekly to Hongkong and one weekly to west Africa, as well as flights from London to Paris and from England to Scandinavian countries.

THE CHOICE OF THE MULTITUDE

CIVIL LIBERTY CURBS AROUSE MANY CANADIANS

Regulations Under Attack, Especially Since Britain, France Have Relaxed Their Own

Christian Science Monitor

OTTAWA—Canada's defense regulations have become the center of a bitter political controversy in the heat of the federal election campaign. The fact that opposition to the Defense of the Realm Regulations in both Britain and France has caused the respective governments to relax the more arduous measures has greatly strengthened those opposition groups in Canada that see in some of the regulations a "menace to civil liberties."

A situation that brought a notable increase of power to the movement was the sudden decision of Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King January 25 to dissolve Parliament three hours after its opening, which the Conservative opposition considered a blow at parliamentary privilege and therefore ranged the Conservatives with the otherwise uncongenial opposition groups in a campaign in defense of liberties.

The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation—which had to its credit a successful campaign to have Parliament erase from the statute books the rigorous Section 98 of the Criminal Code dealing with punishment for sedition and which has been the most uncompromising supporter of freedom of speech—has been under a cloud owing to its opposition to the dispatch of an expeditionary force overseas. The other opposition group, the Social Creditors, have little influence outside of Alberta.

But with the lining up of the Conservatives with these two groups in defense of civil liberties, it is expected that the combined onslaught may force some alleviation of the Defense of Canada Regulations.

CHANGE IN REGULATIONS

The Conservatives are directing their principal attack on the "scuttling" of Parliament. Dr. R. J. Manion, the leader, said recently that there was little use in fighting for freedom if you destroy the keystone of the arch of freedom, a free Parliament.

The reason this argument is peculiarly effective is the reverence that attaches to Parliament in Canada.

Parliamentary rules are much more punctiliously followed at Ottawa than at Westminster. Phrases ruled "unparliamentary" by the Speaker at Ottawa would pass without comment in London, where Clydesiders at the close of the last war introduced a new idea of decorum in debate. The free and easy speech of the soap box orators in Hyde Park has always been a source of mild wonder to Canadians visiting the old country.

With two basic races, speaking different tongues, Canada cannot be as sure of its political clothes as Britain. The Constitution is a combination of the American and the British, without the American Bill of Rights, and with liberties guaranteed not by the written word but by unwritten conventions.

To the people, whatever may be the shortcomings of the British North America Act, which is the Canadian constitution, it is in Parliament that the rights of minorities are really guarded, and the liberties of the people and the status of this country as a Dominion are enshrined.

SO IT'S AN INSULT

That is why so much is made on the election platforms of the "insult" to Parliament in closing the session so abruptly that the elected representatives of the people could not have their say about the war record of the Government.

The Defense of Canada Regulations were brought into operation at a time when there was a good deal of disquieting Nazi propaganda in the West. There was anxiety over possible sabotage of key plants and the public buildings, which fortunately has not materialized. There was the consistent uneasiness over possible symptoms of disunity.

The war effort is in the hands of the Federal Government. The provinces have no direct hand in it and provinces, particularly those with dynamic leadership, have been inclined to emphasize their loyalty by being very strict about carrying out provincial laws against subversive activities.

To this may be ascribed the threat of the Premier of British Columbia to the Labor member of the Legislature who was critical of British and Canadian war policies, and the very thorough methods adopted by the Attorney General of Ontario.

The provinces are out to do their part and in some cases may have been over zealous. There is evidence, however, of a toning down all round. This may be seen in the softening of the charges against three men arraigned in Ottawa for circulating Communist leaflets. This trend is likely to continue.

The comparatively harmless activities of misguided individuals will probably be treated differently from those of established enemy agents.

The university instructor who apparently quite innocently sent to his sweetheart in Denmark a diagram of the disposition of naval units in an Eastern port was fined one dollar for contravention of the regulations.

COMMUNISTS HIT HARDEST

It is unlikely that the dissemination of Communist propaganda pamphlets will be treated very leniently. On account of the Communist attitude toward religion it is faced with unrelenting opposition in Quebec.

Recently a petition to the Prime Minister from the Permanent Committee for French Survival in Canada asked the Government "to decree the Communist Party illegal and to intensify if possible the fight undertaken against Communist propaganda in this country."

The Finnish war has increased the dislike of Communism in the country generally.

The so-called Padlock Law which gave the Quebec Provincial Government the power to close any building for a year from which Communist literature had been broadcast, illustrated the attitude of the people of Quebec.

The Federal Government was asked in Parliament many times to have this law referred to the Supreme Court for a decision on the question of the Province's jurisdiction to pass such a law, but to no avail.

Any action of the kind would have raised an uproar in Quebec, as unquestionably the majority of the people were behind the law.

RADIOCASTS TOO

Col. George A. Drew, Conservative leader in Ontario, protested against the censoring of parts of a recent radio address in which he criticized the country's war effort. His protest raised the difficult question of how far criticism of the country's preparedness can be construed as offering encouragement to the enemy.

Censorship of the expression of public opinion is considerably more severe in Canada than in Britain, partly because in Canada there is the danger of sectionalism. The country presented a united front on participation in the World War, but possible disunity in any section is always the bogey.

The bulk of the German press from the United States is allowed into Canada. No attempt is made to bar papers which present an honest neutral attitude even though opinions expressed may be critical of Canada or Britain, but those that seem clearly to be agents of Nazi or Soviet propaganda are prohibited.

TWO PAPERS BANNED

In Canada two papers have been banned, the Clarion in Toronto and Clarte in Montreal, both of which advocated the overthrow of the Government by force. At the same time police are rigidly enforcing one particular section of the Defense of Canada Regulations which prohibits the dissemination of literature in any form which is "likely to prejudice recruiting, training, discipline, or administration of any of His Majesty's forces." Arrests under this section were recently made in Ottawa and Hamilton, Ontario.

New York World's Fair Reopens for Second Year

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, May 11—Undeterred by hostilities in Europe, the New York World's Fair, which last year drew a record crowd of more than 32,000,000 visitors from all parts of the globe, formally was reopened here this morning with appropriate ceremonies.

A message dedicating the Fair's opening was read at the Court of Peace by a representative of President Roosevelt, who last year personally took part in opening day ceremonies.

An estimated crowd of 100,000 visitors jammed the Fair grounds today. The current Fair is scheduled to run for 155 days until October 27.

NEW SPIRITUAL LEADERSHIP URGED IN U.S.

Landon, G.O.P. Presidential Candidate in 1936, Speaks To People of America

Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON — What American democracy most requires at this moment of trial is an understanding of man's spiritual needs and reliance upon man's spiritual qualities.

This is the unexpected "political" message of the titular head of the Republican Party and its 1936 Presidential candidate, Alf M. Landon, who joined with numerous other Republican leaders.

Mr. Landon spoke as one seeking neither public office nor public honor. He appealed for an end to bitterness in national life and for a resurgence of tolerance, forebearance, fortitude, and mutual helpfulness.

The American nation, Mr. Landon declared, must not lose faith in the spiritual qualities in men, for it is these qualities, he said, "that make nations, that make civilizations, that make all greatness of the human race. Popular government was born of that faith and still rests upon it."

ROOSEVELT POLICY HIT

While Mr. Landon was contrasting Lincoln, the true Emancipator, with the "false emancipators," Adolf Hitler and Joseph Stalin, in his address in Springfield, Ill., Republican leaders at meetings in different parts of the country were putting on a preview of the coming campaign and almost uniformly condemned the Roosevelt Administration for its over-centralization of power in the Federal Government and over-centralization of Federal Government in the Chief Executive.

The principal political speech was delivered in St. Paul, Minn., by one of the Party's aspirants for the Presidential nomination. Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg appealed to independent voters, Republicans, and dissatisfied Democrats to unite in electing a coalition President, pledged to one term and manifestly free of all incentive but the one and single job of saving America."

Senator Warren R. Austin of Vermont, speaking in Louisville, Ky., put emphasis, as did Mr. Landon, upon Lincoln's spiritual leadership and praised the concept of Lincoln once expressed by John M. Robinson, a former Kentucky Congressman, who said of Lincoln: "It seems he took hold of the strong arm of God with one hand and took the hands of the people with the other."

It was faith in the average man which Mr. Landon asked to have restored in the values of American politics.

TRUST IN PEOPLE

"The two dictators, Stalin and Hitler, do not trust the average man and woman," he said. "Lincoln did. So must we.

"Government is stirring up bitterness. Industry is stirring up bitterness. Labor unions are stirring up bitterness. If this country is to have a real and lasting prosperity, all bitterness and distrust between government and industry and labor must be dispelled.

"Only if government stands for strict and impartial justice, as well as peace, can prosperity be accomplished. A partisan government can only accentuate conflict. If the government is to have the confidence of all interests, it must stand for no one interest. It must, with true justice and true impartiality, represent all, and, if we are to remain a republic, we must never lose confidence in the inherent political capacity of each other. Unless that be true—I mean, unless the mass is capable of exercising responsibility there is no breath in popular government.

"Our perceptions may be imperfect, but there must be and is, more good than bad in our combined intelligence. I repeat again, unless this be true, there is no breath left in the republic."

KINDLINESS OF LINCOLN

What a different place the world would be today, Mr. Landon declared, if the followers of Joseph Stalin and Adolph Hitler could boast of the generosity, the gentle kindliness, the humor, and the understanding of democracy on the part of their leaders, as can Americans of Lincoln's.

"Hitler and Stalin," he said, "force the State to live and die for them. Lincoln lived and died for the State."

"The methods of popular government are still superior to the methods of dictators.

"Instead of this Nation, and other nations, drifting away from the memory of Lincoln, many movements gather around the prestige of his name. The principles of London are the essence of the common faith of all free men. The principles of Lincoln were born of peace and of war. They represent tolerance in war, fortitude in defeat, forbearance in victory, optimism in peace, mutual helpfulness in the restoration of broad and enduring prosperitiy.

LANDON ASKS PLEDGE

"Let us, who have gathered here in Lincoln's memory, pledge ourselves, as he pledged himself ,to these principles, in the firm belief that they are lessons for the year 1940, and for every year that follows.

"The prophets of oid, sitting out on the hillsides of Chaldea, when civilized nations were forming, saw there were certain things you could not write into a law book. They knew that if civilization was to survive, mankind must develop consideration for one another, and a certain thoughtfulness for one another's problems; that without consideration, and pity, and warm humanity, our lives would be filled always with the bitterness and rancor of war.

"Lincoln proved to us that the good thread which runs through the lives of just ordinary persons is the thread, the true principle, which binds and ever will bind this Republic into a sound and healthy and peaceful union.

"He knew that we must have a genuine confidence in the average man; that we must trust his intellectual integrity; that we cannot lose faith in those qualities in man which we think of as spiritual."

SOME GOOD IN NEW DEAL

Senator Vandenberg admitted that it was both impossible and undesirable to scrap the whole New Deal. He said that many of its "social-minded objectives are here to stay.

"The answer," he declared in his St. Paul address, "is that we must widely balance yesterday against tomorrow—experience against necessity. We do not weaken our indictment against the New Deal by finding spots of good in it.

"The answer is that we must scrap the bad; improve the good; live by the spirit of the Constitution; quit reckless innovation; make government solvent; give legitimate American free enterprise a sustained chance; restore a maximum of home rule in states and local communities.

"What to do? Do everything to legitimately encourage free enterprise and the honest profit motive in private business. Undo everything which needlessly discourages business and aggravates the uncertainties and the timidities which hamper success and prosperity. Do everything that puts government itself on dependable foundations. Undo everythin gthat makes government wobble and needlessly puts it in the way of recovery and re-employment."

BRIDGES OUTLINES ISSUE

Senator Styles Bridges of New Hampshire, speaking at Muncie, Ind., declared that the issue before the country is "whether America is to be transformed into some form of state capitalism or socialism, controlled by the Federal Government, or whether our system of private economy is to be revived."

Representative Hamilton Fish of New York, addressing a Lincoln Birthday meeting at Wheeling, W. Va., contended that the reciprocal trade treaties were "impoverishing American labor."

Representative J. William Ditter of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, leading Lincoln Day observances in Cleveland, Ohio, charged that the United States is confronted with a "one-man sitdown strike" on the third-term question, and claimed that "every vital problem of government is obscured by the fogs of the third-term mystery.

Representative Clifford Hope of Kansas, ranking Republican member of the House Agricultural Committee, declared in Anderson, Ind., that the "big issue of the coming campaign will be the failure of the New Deal Administration to do the job it set out to accomplish when it took control in March, 1933."

Representative B. Carroll Reece of Tennessee, speaking at Chattanooga, Tenn., said that American industry needed to be released from repressive controls before recovery and re-employment can be achieved.

CHURCHILL KNOWN AS FIREBRAND; ARCH-ENEMY OF HITLERISM

New British Premier Expected to Drive Nations Into Total War on Germans

Winston Churchill achieved his life's ambition when he became Prime Minister. The arch-enemy of Nazism and the "enfant terrible" of Parliament has held more offices than any other British politicians. He has been First Lord of the Admiralty, Secretary of War, Minister of Munitions, and Colonial Secretary, and has served in more cabinets than any other Englishman.

When the war began last September it took a newspaper campaign, with headlines of the biggest type, to drive home the fact that 25 years after, there were still people who remembered that Winston Churchill, half-American friends and champion of the Duke of Windsor, aviator, amateur bricklayer, former war correspondent, author historian, soldier, painter, orator, polo player, former stormy petrel, was still available for his old post of First Lord of Admiralty.

Immediately on the outbreak of war, Mr. Churchill entered the Chamberlain Government as First Lord of the Admiralty. It was then believed that if and when Mr. Chamberlain resigned, the former would become Premier. At last, it has happened.

A little more aged, perhaps, looking a little thinner on the top, with a few more wrinkles in the cherubic face which is rarely without a cigar, the Winston of 1940 has lost little of the fire of his days as the "Happy Warrior," even though he seems a little more bent and invariably uses a walking stick.

CALLED WARMONGER

The name of Winston Churchill, who had been right so many times, like his old rival snowy crested David Lloyd George, became a criterion of the British Government's sincerity in its determination to fight Hitlerism.

Hitler himself, and a horde of radio orators, inveighed against Churchill, Eden and Duff-Cooper as warmongers. Nothing was better calculated to demonstrate that Chamberlain meant business than the appointment of Churchill to the key post of First Lord of the Admiralty.

Now over two years Churchill warned the British Government of the scale of German rearmament and pleaded with them to do something to put British armaments on something approaching equality.

Churchill, as well as Lloyd George, warned the British Government that Hitler had embarked on a campaign of conquest that would only be stopped by force. Churchill over two years ago advocated the creation of a Ministry of Supply in order to accelerate the scale of British rearmament and munitions production.

TOTAL WAR DUE

With characteristic vigor, Britain is expected to launch a total war with Mr. Churchill at the head of the Government. As First Lord of Admiralty he effected an organization which squashed the U-boat menace after only a month of war. By October 1 there was a week when not a single British merchant ship had been torpedoed.

The smoothness with which the convoy system and the contraband control organization have been put into operation are a tribute to his organizing powers. They recall the way in which he was able to announce to the Cabinet at the beginning of the last war that the fleet was ready.

Churchill's brilliance is stated to have been inherited from Marlborough. His aggressiveness and vigorous speech are stated to be an inheritance from his American mother Jennie Jerome, daughter of Leonard Jerome, of New York, who, it is said, also gave him his eagerness for adventure and inclination towards sensationalism.

He first entered government office when he was undersecretary of the colonies in 1906-08, two years later he became President of the Board of Trade. In 1911 to 1915 he was First Lord of the Admiralty.

OLD CAMPAIGNER

He served with Spanish forces combatting rebellion in Cuba in 1895; fought on India's northwest frontier in 1897, on the Nile in 1898, in the Boer war, 1899-1900 and on the western front in France in 1916. In all these conflicts he won medals for personal bravery.

Whenever he fought, he wrote. His books numbered a score. They recorded his own activities and those of his colleagues frankly. His greatest service embraced the pre-war, war and post-war years. He became first Lord in 1911 under instructions to build up Britain's seapower to meet the threat against its supremacy by the new fleet of Wilhelm II of Germany. By 1914 he had a powerful armada.

He had the foresight to keep this great fleet, which King George V reviewed at Spithead on July 20, 1914, on a war footing, instead of having it scattered in the ordinary course the next week. When England declared war on August 4, the ships were at their stations in the North Sea and Germany's navy was bottled up.

DARDANELLES VETERAN

Churchill rushed men and ships to Antwerp and went there himself in October, 1914, when there was some hope of saving the city from the Germans. But his indefatigable efforts, diplomatically and in the actual work of defense, were unavailing.

His next great effort, in February 1915, ended in tragic failure. He planned a huge naval attack upon the Dardanelles in the hope of forcing the straits, defeating Turkey and giving Russia a sea route for war-time commerce. But hidden land guns held the ships at bay and mines sank several. Troops landed upon the Gallipoli peninsula to attack the Turkish forts in the rear, were repulsed. The effort was kept up until December, but by then Churchill was out of the cabinet, a political victim of the fiasco.

He resigned November 15, 1915, went to France and for six months was lieutenant colonel commanding the sixth royal Scots Fusiliers.

David Lloyd George recalled him to high office in 1917 as minister of munitions. In 1918, as Secretary for War, he inspired the Allied expedition to Archangel against the Bolshevist revolution in Russia. But along with other war-time leaders he was caught in the popular reaction of December, 1922, and lost his seat in the Commons.

ADJUSTED WAR DEBTS

He got back to parliament in September 1924, and at the same time achieved his ambition of occupying his father's old post as Chancellor of the Exchequer. He held it nearly five years and in that time adjusted war debts; reorganized the tax system, reduced levies upon earned incomes and established pensions for widows.

When the advent of Ramsay MacDonald's second labor government in 1929 reduced Churchill to the status of a private member of Commons, he kept himself in the public eye by leading a coterie which combatted socialism in England and opposed close relations with the Soviet Union. Noteworthy too were misapprehensions of the rearmament program of Germany. He labelled the nazi regime a "government of terrorists."

Churchill was born November 30, 1874, eldest son of Lord Randolf Churchill who was the third son of the seventh Duke of Marlborough. He went to school at Harrow, then to Sandhurst for his military education. In 1908 he married Clementine Hozier. To them were born one son and three daughters.

ANTI-ORIENTAL VIEW VANISHING IN S. AFRICA

Yokohama Trader Completes Six-Month Business Trip Through African Centers

By SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

KOBE, May 9—"It is indeed fortunate that the strong anti-Oriental sentiment formerly prevalent in the Union of South Africa has been largely alleviated, for that market can be developed into one of Japan's best," said Takoho Satoh, director of the Satoh Shokai, Yokohama, upon his arrival in Kobe this afternoon on the Hawaii Maru. Mr. Satoh has just completed a six months' business trip through Cape Town, Johannesburg, Durban, East London and other important towns.

"It would appear that early Chinese immigrants have had a great deal to do with this prejudiced sentiment for they are regarded as something to be feared and watched. They are 'boogy men' to the children," he said. The prominent business leader further stated that antagonism toward the Japanese was almost a thing of the past, especially among the better educated and that indications of improving Japanese-South African relations were encouraging.

Mr. Satoh expressed surprise over the well-being of the native laborers employed in the various gold mines in South Africa, notably those in the employment of a large mine in Johannesburg, the principal city. Last year ¥1,500,000,000 in gold was dug out of this particular mine.

Clothing and general textiles are supplied to the better classes by both Great Britain and the United States but Japan supplies the middle and lower classes. Mr. Satoh remarked that here (South Africa) too, in every available park, military training was going on at a terrific rate daily. "They are preparing for the worst," he said.

Returning to Kobe on the same boat was Jiro Koshima, manager of the Matsusaki Shoten, Kobe, from an extended business trip in Sumatra. Relating his experiences there, Mr. Kojima said that on one occasion a heavy British bomber attempted to bomb a German merchantman at anchor in port. "There was heavy bombing but no damages," he said.

United States capital is becoming more and more influential and the Netherlanders are conducting the major portion of the business through United States banks.

In Singapore Mr. Kojima said that anti-German sentiment is outstanding. Shooting galleries have Hitler doll targets for pop-guns. Songs and films, emphasizing the downfall of Hitler, are evident in every part of the town, he concluded.

Decision Due Soon On Manchoukuo's Material Program

Domei Tsushin

HSINKING, May 13—The final decision will be given on the Manchoukuo Material mobilization program for the first quarter of the current fiscal year as well as the tentative one for the full year which was formulated on the basis of the assumed quantity of materials to be imported from Japan, at the meeting of the Material Mobilization Committee to be held tomorrow.

As for the tentative Manchoukuo Material mobilization program, for the full year, it may be affected by the Japanese Material Mobilization program which is now under discussion as the result of possible change in the quantity of materials to be imported from Japan along the lines of the latter.

Meanwhile, the special material mobilization program which is now under joint discussion from the angle of the Japanese-Manchoukuo joint interest, will be formulated apart from the general ones of both Manchoukuo and Japan. It will be formulated by the end of this month at the latest.

Under such circumstances, much significance is attached to the projected joint Material Mobilization program.

FAVORITES WIN IN FIRST Y.C.A.C. TENNIS TILTS

Fair Weekend Weather Permits Large Number of Playoffs in All Rounds

YOKOHAMA, May 13—With fine weather prevailing on Saturday and Sunday the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club's spring tennis tournaments made great headway. Practically all first and a number of second round matches were played off.

The closest match was one between F. R. Harriss and E. Crane against J. C. Lumgair and R. J. Steer, the former finally ekeing out a 7-5, 4-6 and 10-8 victory in the men's handicap doubles. Another nip and tuck struggle was witnessed in this event a week ago when G. Charlesworth and D. Cull took the measure of C. Heseltine and P. Nipkow by 5-7, 7-5 and 8-6.

FAVORITES WIN

In the championship events there were no upsets, the favored players all advancing a round or two without much trouble.

The hardest fought singles match on Sunday was the one between M. Shalfeieff and D. Dentici in the men's "A" handicap, the former winning by 6-2, 8-10 and 6-4.

In the ladies' events, the closest game to date is the contest between Mrs. M. Brigel and Miss B. Chapman in the "A" handicap singles, with the former obtaining a 6-4 and 11-9 victory.

SHANGHAI RIOT LAID TO SOARING COST OF LIVING

Killings and Kidnapings Daily Occurrences; Police Constable, Amuck, Shoots 3

By K. M. STEINER
The Japan Times Correspondent

SHANGHAI—Labor trouble again holds the lime-light in Shanghai today as disgrunted workers of the China Inport and Export Lumber Co.'s plant in Yangtszepoo killed one of their fellow-workmen today. Settlement police from four different stations answered the call to the plant and by noon all the workmen—300 in number—were evicted from the premises while three were sent to hospital and the dead man was taken to the mortuary where an inquest is being held tomorrow. The police arrested some 20 suspects who were being questioned tonight prior to be sent to the court in the morning.

With the depreciation in the value of the Chinese dollar and the consequent increase in the cost of living, Shanghai is bound to have further unrest among the poorer classes it is feared. Efforts are being made by many firms to readjust wages but not only is this done after the cost of living has been at an unprecedented high level for well over a year, but the increases rarely make up for the difference in the prices of commodities.

LIVING COSTS SOAR

The cost of living index is 370 per cent today if the pre-hostility figures are taken as a basis, while salary increases are placed somewhere around 40 per cent.

Foreigners too are beginning to feel the pinch, apart from those—by far in the minority—who are paid in foreign currencies and who consequently live for next to nothing at the prevailing rates of exchange.

Imported foods, for instance, have become tabu for the average Shanghailander as have alcoholic drinks, even the price of beer having been increased again at the end of last week.

GASOLINE PRICES UP

Gasoline now costs sh$3.50 a gallon as compared to sh$1.50 in 1937, and it was therefore only to be expected that an advertisement like the one appearing in the "North-China Daily News" this morning, in which the advertiser offers the rear seat on a tantem bicycle, should appear. Many motorists have placed their cars in storage while others have disposed of them altogether.

There is hardly an item that has not increased in price in the past week. The height of nervousness was reached on Thursday, when it became known that the dollar had crashed again. Countless compradore shops, grocers and department stores refused to sell any goods—even in foreign currency—and housewives who thought that they would benefit by buying up all the groceries they could possibly get, were disappointed.

PROFITEERING HIT

This state of affairs also caused the administrations of both foreign areas in Shanghai to issue a proclamation immediately whereby all persons benefiting by the drop in the exchange to boost their quotations would be severely dealt with.

There is only one subject of conversation throughout Shanghai at the present time, namely, the cost of living.

When a robber opens fire on pedestrians it is news, even though these things happen too frequently here now to use any major interest. But when a Chinese police constable loses his temper, shoots three persons and then decamps taking his service pistol with him, then it is news even to sophisticated Shanghai residents. This happened yesterday when a constable started an argument with a tram driver over a minor traffic offense with the result that a pedestrian, in an effort to settle the matter in an amiable way, intervened. This had the opposite effect with the constable who drew his pistol. The pedestrian took to his heels, but was shot down.

RUNS AMUK

Apparently amuk, the constable then fired at the driver of the tram who was hit in the neck, then at a group of curious pedestrians. A Chinese youth was seriously injured and is not expected to live.

An elderly Chinese who attempted to get behind a cement telephone pole slipped and broke his right leg.

The constable boarded a nearby bus, drove down to Chengtu Road where he alighted, taking a bicycle from an oncoming cyclist. He then proceeded towards Sinza Road where he abandoned the cycle and jumped onto a passing motor truck. A few hours later his pistol and a clip of ammunition were found in an ash can far from the scene of the crime. He has not yet been apprehended.

KIDNAPINGS COMMON

Assassinations and kidnapings, mostly of a political nature, are becoming daily affairs in Shanghai since last week. In most cases the victims are not prominent although they have certain political affiliations and it appears as though certain independent groups who have no official status but who fervently support various political factions, take matters into their own hands and order their gunmen to shot or kidnap whoever they may consider enemies.

With the races this afternoon concluded, Shanghai has again passed three days on which almost everyone who can afford to do so, goes to see the ponies do their best to win for their backers. Splendid weather favored the three-day meeting this year and record attendances were noted.

Rainfall in May Below Normal, Says Weatherman

The oft-termed expression of April Showers was meaningless to Tokyo water authorities. Rainfall for the month was far below expectations with statistics showing 59 millimeters less than last year of the same month. Monday's light rainfall, although it provided relief to Tokyo's populace was insufficient to elevate the city reservoirs.

Forecasts indicate there will be frequent showers here in view of low pressure areas in the Yangtze River Basin but it will be of little aid.

The usual rainy season which begins around June 10, will be short-lived although there will be heavier rainfall of longer duration in the southern part of Japan, according to weather reports.

PRICE COUNCIL WILL ADVISE SUGAR RATIONS

Also Will Ask Government To Include Matches and Extend System Nationally

The Central Price Control Support Council, an economic advisory organ composed of leading economic and financial persons including Baron Seinosuke Goh, will shortly advise the Government to enforce a ration card system upon sugar and matches simultaneously over the whole nation.

The Council is opposed to the Government's plan of enforcing the system only in the six largest cities, Tokyo, Yokohama, Kyoto, Osaka, Kobe and Fukuoka on the ground that, if the enforcement of system is confined to the six largest cities, there will be brought about a drastic shortage of commodities as a result of large-scale purchase by dealers in cities of commodities from localities.

To push the Government to enforce ration card upon other daily necessities, the Council is prepared to embark on the census of stored goods in the country.

According to researches which have hitherto been conducted by the Council regarding the ration card system it has already been enforced in the following cities, towns and villages:

Mayebashi and two other cities, in Gunma Prefecture, beginning May 1; Hirano Town, Aichi Prefecture, May 18; Ando and Ekigami Villages, Nara Prefecture, May 1; Hioi Town, Okayama Prefecture, May 1; nine villages, Hiroshima Prefecture, March 31; Kochi City and 14 towns, Kochi Prefecture, April 16; Okinawa Prefecture, April 11; and Taihoku City, Formosa, April 16.

As to ration card system upon sugar, it has been enforced in the following cities, towns and villages: Kushiro City, April 26, Hakodate City, April 27, in Hokkaido; Morioka City, Shizuoka Prefecture, April 1, Nagoya City, May 1, Osagi and Uyenoda Towns, Miye Prefecture, April 16; Sano Town, Osaka Prefecture, May 6; Shingu City, Wakayama Prefecture, April 1, Yamaguchi City, Yamaguchi Prefecture, February 5; Komatsushima Town, Tokushima Prefecture, February 25; Uwajima City, Kagawa Prefecture, March 27.

Imperial Rescript Granting Anniversary To Be Celebrated

Plans for celebrating the first anniversary of the granting of the Imperial Rescript to the young students of Japan, were completed Monday, the Hochi reports.

The celebration will be held next Wednesday, May 22 in the presence of His Imperial Highness Prince Chichibu.

Over 90,000 boy and girl students of all the universities and colleges in Tokyo will gather at the Yoyogi parade grounds to participate in the gala event.

Male students will march past His Imperial Highness, while the girl students will compose a huge chorus singing the 26th Centenary Celebration Song, and other patriotic songs.

Participators will assemble at the parade-grounds by 8:30 a.m. and file in rank at 9:30.

After singing the national anthem, the group will bow in the direction of the Imperial Palace. Education Minister Chinjiro Matsuura is expected to read the Imperial Rescript and will also make a few comments.

The girl students will then sing their songs, the boy students will march past His Imperial Highness, and the whole crowd will shout "banzai."

U.S. Trader Advises Way to Cooperate

Domei Tsushin

SAN FRANCISCO, May 14—Joseph Stevenot, leading American industrialist in the Philippine Islands who is en route to Manila from Washington where he placed before high Government officials his intimate knowledge of the current Oriental situation, said on his arrival here today that he firmly believes if the United States recognizes Japan as a proud and sensitive nation Japan would respond instantly with tangible evidence of a desire to cooperate in the Far East.

"I say this as an American businessman who has lived close to Japan for 30 years," he said. "We must not underestimate the intelligence of the Japanese."

He said that the question of what nation eventually will dominate the Orient would be settled soon. "If we cooperate out there, we will be able to keep going; if not, we will be told to get out," he said.

Mr. Stevenot will return to Manila by plane.

KUHARA GATHERS MORE ADHERENTS FOR NEW PARTY

Slated to Call on Nakajima With Proposal; Prominent Minseito Men Sympathetic

The elements working toward consolidation of the national system to enable Japan to bring the China war to a "consummation devoutly to be wish'd" are regarded as steadily rallying about the new party movement of Fusanosuke Kuhara, president of the Seiyukai Kuhara faction. Even his implacable rival, Chikuhei Nakajima, president of the Seiyukai, Nakajima faction is said to be not unwilling to lend an ear to Mr. Kuhara's impassioned appeal for a national coalition of political parties.

Mr. Kuhara, who had long been known as a dark horse in the political world before he became president of his faction, made his new surprise move Saturday when he called on Chuji Machida, president of the Minseito, (largest party in the House of Representatives), for a second time. He is understood to have sought the collaboration of Mr. Machida in the establishment of a strong political system undivided by party sentiment or interest.

NOT DISCOURAGED

President Machida is reported to have maintained on this occasion his doctrine of inter-party cooperation without actual fusion into a single party. But discouragement is not in Mr. Kuhara's mental fabric. He is expected to call on his rival, Mr. Nakajima, president some time this week to seek his help to bring about a Seiyukai-Minseito merger.

It is still unknown whether Mr. Nakajima will agree to this proposal but, the card Mr. Kuhara has up his sleeve is said to be the offer of presidency of the whole Seiyukai to Tsuruhei Matsuno, Railway Minister, a Kuhara man, as vice-president and himself as adviser to the party. This fusion of the two factions of the Seiyukai is intended by Mr. Kuhara to be preliminary to the fusion with the Minseito.

Thus, if he succeeds in bringing Mr. Nakajma round to his view, carrying his point by sheer force of zeal for which he is so well known, the move will inevitably affect the sentiment of the Minseito and a general fluctuation throughout the ranks of political parties is regared as inevitable.

IDENTIFIED WITH MOVE

For within the Minseito itself Ryutaro Nagai, Count Yoriyasu Arima and others have long been identified with the new party movement. They are believed certain to follow the movement the moment it is set going. The League for Achievement of the Goal of the Holy War also is waiting to take advantage of any move to, set up a single strong party they believe most suited to a wartime political system. The Social Mass Party is said to be similarly inclined, to dissolve itself in fusing with such a powerful national party.

The one party movement is thus considered to be steadily gathering momentum, accelerated by the Saito issue which divided the political world between the forces of renovation and those of the tatus quo.

The War Department disclosed that the Army's maneuvers in August will be the greatest ever held in peacetime, affecting all military districts.

It is learned meanwhile that British and French purchasing missions have purchased $35,000,000 worth of American warplanes during the past four weeks.

WASHINGTON, May 13—Secretary of State Cordell Hull, in a speech before the American International Law Society, tonight frankly admitted that the United States has no choice but to expand its armaments program because of "fraud and treachery" in international relations.

Secretary Hull emphasized that the United States must build up its defenses, asserting that there has been a staggering multiplication of instances wherein solemn and contractual obligations have been brushed aside with contemptuous gestures of destructive action.

Without naming any one country, he attacked nations who advocate force to obtain their national aims. "Powerful nations have built up vast armaments for the avowed purpose of attaining their national aims by force and their actions have compelled other nations—even those most sincerely devoted to the cause of peace—to increase to immense proportions their own armaments."

Referring to "Fifth Column" activities, including parachutists and saboteurs, Mr. Hull declared, "peaceful nations are deprived of their independence by the use of armed forces or threat of force combined with the exercise of fraud and treachery and conquered populations are being subjected to new refinements of oppression and cruelty."

Concluding, Mr. Hull appealed to the American people to present a "wholly united public opinion behind our nation's effort to exert weight and its moral influence in the favor of revindication and revitalization of basic principles of order under law which alone can give lasting assurance, safety, security and peace."

Some State Department officials commented that Mr. Hull's address could be regarded as an indirect denunciation of Germany and the Soviet Union because of his forceful language in condemning "fraud and treachery" in international relations.

200 PARENTS SEE ST. JOSEPH'S TRACK MEET

One School Record Falls When Johnson Heaved Discus 98 Feet ½ Inch

By SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

YOKOHAMA, May 14—With more than 200 parents of competitors, old boys and friends attending, the St. Joseph's College 29th annual track and field meet was held today at this Yokohama boys school's campus, situated at 85 Bluff.

The large crowd witnessed a number of fine performances as the 54-event program was run off, and enjoyed many a good laugh when the additional comic events were contested. There were races for the guests as well, and these events also received hearty support.

SCHOOL RECORD SMASHED

One school record fell when T. Janson heaved the discus a distance of 98 feet ½ inch to displace the mark of 95 feet 7 inches set by A. Tarasenk in June, 1935. Although beaten in the event by H. Wolschke, he set the new standard when the leading participants were permitted extra throws in attempts to break the record. Janson received a special prize for this performance and also gained the award for being the athlete giving the best display of spirit and sportsmanship.

J. Gomes won the senior championship with 23 points by virtue of victories in the 100- and 220-yard dashes, broad jump and hop step and jump and a second place in the javelin throw for good measure. J. Kranz was runner-up with 18 points and K. Balabushkin gained third place with 17.

H. da Silva gained premier honors in the 1st junior division, his wins in the broad jump, pole vault and hope step and jump, with second places in the century and furlong sprints giving him 21 points. G. Quini was next with 19 points, followed by Simoes with 17.

W. Gordes gave the best all-round performance in the 2nd junior division with 21 markers to his credit, followed by J. Lerner who gained 18. Tied for third place were W. Shroff and N. Yasui who both collected 16.

BEST ATHLETE

W. Janson proved to be the best athlete in the 3rd junior division by garnering 16 points. J. Naraindas was second with 14 and F. Quini was next in line with 13.

The second division events were in the nature of team competitions, with the Reds proving victorious by gaining 131 points. The Blues were second with 105 while the Whites placed third with 71.

In the minims first group J. da Silva took top position with 72 points while P. Nakaike was runner-up with 70. In the second group K. Griggs gained first place with a total of 78 points and W. Arab followed by chalking up 64.

J. B. Gaschy, director of the school, presented the prizes after the meet. A challenge shield, donated by the Yokohama Sport Club, was presented to the senior champion, J. Gomes, by Mr. Fred da Silva. This shield will become the property of any student winning the senior championship three times.

Officials of the meet were as follows:

President: Mr. Gaschy; vice-presidents: A. High and C. Imhoff, faculty supervisors: J. Gilfether and H. Gerard; general supervisor: C. T. Mayes; starters: F. Sauer and M. V. Fachtmann; clerk of the course: W. Abromitis; timers: F. Tribull and J. Brandmeier; scorer: J. Kessler.

Members of the student committee consisted of:

Chairman: T. Jansen; secretary: R. Lew; K. Murase, N. Dick, K. Balabushkin, W. Wolschke, U. Nakao and L. da Costa.

Results of the various events were as follows:

Future of Mankind To Be Decided In Next 30 Days

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, May 14—The British Ambassador to the United States, Lord Lothian, addressing a gathering of the English-Speaking Union here, tonight declared that the question of whether the greater part of the world will fall under the domination of totalitarianism will rest on the outcome of the European war during the next 30 days.

"The next 30 days," he said, "may determine whether there is to be any effective barrier left to the domination of all Europe, Asia and Africa by dictatorships, leaving the United States isolated and alone to champion the free way of life, or whether Chancellor Hitler's method of conquest by violence and fraud will receive its first check and mankind, though the struggle be far from over, will breathe more freely again."

League Will Withdraw Sofia Representative

Domei Tsushin

SOFIA, May 15—Premier Begdan Filoff announced during a session of the Bulgarian Parliament that the League of Nations has decided to withdraw the League commissioner stationed in Sofia and also the League's technical counsellor accredited to the Bulgarian national bank.

The announcement was welcomed on the ground that, since the Allies, through the League, have been trying to win over Bulgaria to their side, the severence of connections with the League will consolidate Bulgaria's neutrality in the European conflict.

COVERING THE WORLD

BRUSSELS NOT OPEN TOWN

BERLIN, May 15—The German high command announces: "The Belgian Government declared on May 10 through its Foreign Minister in Brussels as through the mediation of the United States that Brussels is an open town, that no troops are in Brussels and that troops would also not pass through the town. This declaration by the Belgian Government does not correspond to facts. German air reconnaissance has ascertained beyond doubt in the last few days the marching through of military columns of all kinds through Brussels as well as military transports passing through this railway center. The high command therefore cannot regard Brussels any longer as an undefended city."

ALLIED PROPAGANDA

SOFIA, May 15—Deputy Djukmedschieff and several other deputies addressed an inquiry to the Bulgarian Home Minister in the Sobranje whether the propaganda was known to him which was being spread all over Bulgaria at the present time with the aid of English pounds and French francs. They inquired what measures the Government had taken to stop this propaganda endangering the country.

Bacon Prices Up

GENEVA, May 15—Further restriction of the import of bacon into England was confirmed by a copy of the Daily Express which arrived here today. The paper declares that the continual reduction of imports are leading to an unintermittent increase of prices, and urges that the Ministry of Agriculture should intervene and regulate the prices.

80 BRITISH CAPTURED

BERLIN May 15—Eighty British soldiers were captured in the course of German attacks at the Saar front. They were taken prisoners by German shock troop detachments west of Merzig.

CIVILIANS HURT

BERLIN, May 15—Some of the forts of Liege which are still in the hands of the Belgians bombarded all day long yesterday the citadel and the northern part of the town. There are about one thousand Belgian prisoners in the citadel. The bombardment caused dead and wounded among the civilian population. The German troops suffered no losses. The population is much enraged about this useless demonstration.

HUNGARY WITH AXIS

BUDAPEST, May 15—The Rome correspondent of the Eesti-Ujsag today cites reports from the Italian press declaring that Hungary is in full agreement with Germany and Italy and adding that the Budapest population fully endorses Germany's objectives as well as Italy's protest against the English blockade measures. Hungary, it is declared, has again proved its loyalty to the Axis Powers.

ENGLAND UPSET

MILAN, May 15—The capitulation of the Dutch Army has caused the greatest consternation in England, says the London correspondent of the Corriere della Sera. It was hoped in London that the Dutch Army would at least resist a few days more to alleviate the withdrawal of the Belgian left wing which is now in a most difficult situation. It has at last been realized in England, says the Italian correspondent, that a new chapter in the war has begun and the British no longer make a secret of the seriousness of the general situation. Gloomy warclouds have now made their appearance directly over London.

From British Sources

COUNTER-ATTACK MADE

PARIS, May 15—This morning's military communique states: "In central Belgium in the evening an enemy tank attack took place in the region of Gembloux. We counter-attacked and hurled back the enemy. The battle continues. Our aviation and the Royal Air Force acting in complete cooperation continued to intervene very effectively. Nothing of importance on the rest of the front."

In the north the Dutch province of Zeeland is still in Allied hands, according to a survey of the situation along the whole front published here today. In Belgium, Antwerp forms the bastion of the British left flank. South from there the Allies hold a position covering Brussels on a line running east to south to Namur.

SEDAN BATTLE DESCRIBED

LONDON, May 15—The Air Ministry issued the following communique on the Sedan action: "At the great battle which developed at Sedan Royal Air Force bombers escorted by fighters went into action with the French force Low-flying attacks on enmy troops and concentration of tanks were made. They were nighly successful; two pontoon bridges and two permanent bridges were destroyed and at least 15 enemy planes were brought down.

In the fury of these engagements detailed reports cannot be expected. Heavy losses must be sustained in attacks on vital objective strongly defended by anti-aircraft fire and fighters. Our losses, which are not considered excessive in view of the results obtained were 35. Several crews from planes which crashed have already returned to their airdromes, however."

An Admiralty communique issued this afternoon states that, except for the submarine Seal, no British warship has been sunk or seriously damaged since the Low Countries were invaded. Moreover, since the Netherland campaign no mishap has befallen any transport vessel. This announcement was issued following fantastic German claims of British losses at sea.

Nazis Enter The Hague

AMSTERDAM, May 15—The Burgomaster has announced that German troops will arrive in the city this afternoon. German mechanized columns entered The Hague at 5:30 a.m. today.

The Dutch Commander-in-Chief, General Winkelmann, said on the radio last night, explaining his order to the troops to lay down their arms: "The most industrial and thickly populated part of Holland was faced with destruction. The Dutch army at the time of the invasion was 400,000 strong but a large part of it had to be withdrawn to fight parachute troops and subversive elements. Do not forget that you are the Netherlanders and when a large part of our country stands under German domination remember that the Netherlands will rise again as a free nation."

NEW MEMBERS

LONDON, May 15—A further list of Ministers and Undersecretaries in the new Churchill Government was issued tonight as follows: Minister for Pensions, Sir Walter J. Womersley; Postmaster General, W. S. Morrison; Paymaster General, Viscount Cranborne; Attorney General, Sir Donald Somervell; Lord Advocate, Mackay Cooper; Solicitor General, Sir William Jowitt; Solicitor General for Scotland, J.S.G. Reid; Financial Secretary to the Treasury, Captain H.F.C. Crookshank; Parliamentary Undersecretary at the Home Office, O. Peake; Parliamentary Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs, R. A. Butler; Parliamentary Undersecretary for the Dominions, G. Shakespeare; Parliamentary Secretary at the Ministry of Shipping, Sir Arthur Salter; Parliamentary Undersecretary at the Ministry of Health, Miss Florence Horsbrugh; Parliamentary Undersecretary to the Board of Education, J. Chuter Ede; Parliamentary Undersecretary at the Ministry of Labor and National Service, R. Assheton; Parliamentary Undersecretary at the Ministry of Supply, H. MacMillan; Parliamentary Undersecretary at the Ministry of Food, R. J. Boothby; Colonial Office Parliamentary Undersecretary, G. H. Hall; Air Ministry Parliamentary Undersecretary, Captain H. Balfour; Ministry of Aircraft Production Parliamentary Undersecretary, Col. J. Llewellin; Admiralty Civil Lord, Captain A.U.M. Hudson; Board of Trade Parliamentary Undersecretary, Major G. Lloyd George; Secretary for Mines, D. R. Grenfell; Secretary of the Department of Overseas Trade, Harcourt Johnston and Secretary for Petroleum, G. W. Lloyd. The post of Secretary for Petroleum is newly created.

It is also announced that Lord Caldecotte will lead in the House of Lords.

In many parts of the country officials are overwhelmed by the rush of volunteers in response to the broadcast announcement of Anthony Eden, Secretary of State for War, of the formation of a new force whose job it is to see that raiders and parachutists do not disorganize the defense of British. Men between the ages of 17 and 65 are invited to join. Their duties will be part-time and unpaid. They will be given uniforms and arms and are wanted chiefly in the more sparsely populated areas.

TANK ATTACKS OCCUR

PARIS, May 14—The latest official communique states: "At several points enemy tank attacks on the British and French and Belgian troops from Antwerp to the northwest of Namur have occurred. All were repulsed. On the Meuse, between Mezieres and Namur, the enemy succeeded in crossing the river at several points and fierce fighting continues. In the neighborhood of Sedan where the enemy has made some progress, counter-attacks by tanks supported by aerial bombardments are taking place. Further to the east our artillery is in action. Our aviation continued its reconnaissances. Fighters intervened notably to protect the missions of our heavy bombers. During the engagements so far eleven enemy aircraft have been shot down."

NEW U.S. LOAN TO CHUNGKING UNDER STUDY

Shanghai Americans Make Currency Stabilization Request to State Department

United Press

WASHINGTON, May 1—The request for a new American currency stabilization loan to China, sent to the Secretary of State by a group of Shanghai Americans, will be referred to the Treasury Department, it was said in official quarters here last night.

The State Department said that the Shanghai message had not been received here at a late hour last night but press reports said it was expected to be delivered early today.

State Department officials pointed out that the question of currency stabilization loans was one primarily for the attention of the Treasury Department.

Any conclusive developments in response to the Shanghai Americans' request probably will be made known immediately, officials said. They recalled that the Secretary of the Treasury, Henry Morgenthau, recently assured Congress that he would not use the nation's stabilization fund for loans to support foreign currencies without advising Congress in advance.

State Department officials declined to confirm or deny reports that representatives of the Chungking Government already have officially approached the American Government regarding a currency stabilization loan.

Reports from Shanghai yesterday said that foreign banking groups feared a break in the Chinese Nationalist currency because of the depletion of the Anglo-Chinese Stabilization Fund and the prospect that Britain would not replenish this fund because of her own wartime economic necessities.

Congressional circles declined to comment on reports of the Shanghai Americans' request pending further study of the situation. They pointed out that the Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, had not yet received the message.

One Congressman recalled that Congress already has loaned China the limit of funds allowable any single country under present general legislation and that currency stabilization funds probably would have to come from the Treasury's special stabilization fund.

Treasury Department officials said that no statement would be issued on the matter until some communication had been received from the State Department. Treasury officials declined to comment regarding their latest information on the status of the Chinese dollar.

Some observers believed that in the absence of action by Congress on proposals for a trade embargo against Japan, any proposal for a currency stabilization loan to China might be received favorably. They pointed out that the United States has frequently employed economic means as its main strategy in protecting American interests in China and that recent State Department declarations have indicated no change in American policy in the Far East.

Japanese Goods Sold as 'British' In East Indies

By STAFF CORRESPONDENT

KYOTO, May 16—"We were surprised to find that the Japanese goods are sold under the disguise of "Made in England" at a very high price in the Netherlands East Indies and India" said Kikuo Nakajima and Teikichi Masuda, directors of the Kyoto Yuzen Exporters' Association and the Nishijin Weaving Laboratory respectively, who have just returned here from an inspection tour to these countries, in an interview with The Japan Times here today.

"The Japanese goods, especially Kyoto textiles of high quality, are purchased chiefly by the Dutch, Britons, Americans, Germans and the upper class of the natives but they are not suitable for the majority of the natives. Japan should send more articles for practical use suitable for the larger majority of the people."

"The Japanese Government also should encourage the merchants and traders to export the goods of cheaper price yet higher quality. India today is producing textiles as excellent in quality and technique as those of our country, if not more superior. In this respect, both the Japanese Government and people should take proper consideration to meet the demand of the times.

"In N. E. I. the Chinese people are wielding influence in political and financial circles, and there is a great majority of mixed people between the Dutch and Germans. And, if the prevailing war grows worse, it will be a perplexing problem for the N. E. I. Government authorities."

Prince Chichibu To Welcome Manchou Ruler

His Majesty the Emperor will send H.I.H. Prince Chichibu to Yokohama on June 26 to meet His Majesty the Emperor of Manchoukuo who will arrive there to congratulate the Japanese Imperial Court on the 2,600th anniversary of the founding of the Empire.

His Majesty will personally meet His Majesty the Emperor of Manchoukuo at Tokyo station.

General Shigeru Honjo, who distinguished himself in establishing Manchoukuo, was appointed Thursday chairman of the reception committee for His Majesty the Emperor of Manchoukuo. Among the 13 committee members will be Imperial Household Vice-Minister Baron Matsusuke Shirane and Kanjo Horiuchi, director of the East Asia Bureau of the Foreign Office.

POLITICAL PARTY COALITION LOOMS

Agreement with Minor Organizations Reached in Conference; Action Planned

The appeal of Fusanosuke Kuhara, president of the Seiyukai Kuhara faction, for the national coalition of all the political parties seems to be rallying. Agreement was reached at a meeting Wednesday of Mr. Kuhara and 11 members of various minor parties.

Mr. Kuhara and his followers are reported to make another appeal to the Seiyukai Nakajima faction as well as to the Minseito.

The members of the minor parties invited Mr. Kuhara to a luncheon party at the Imperial Hotel to hear his intention for the party combination.

MINORITIES CONCERNED

Representing the promoters, Katsumaro Akamatsu, former Jikyoku-Doshikai, stated that the minor party members are seriously concerned over the recent proposal of Mr. Kuhara to Chuji Machida, president of the Minseito, to combine all parties into one powerful party. Nothing is more necessary, he said, for the Wartime Japan than a national coalition of parties, and the later the realization of it the more disadvantageous for the nation. Then, he asked Mr. Kuhara's unreserved intention upon the subject.

To this Mr. Kuhara replied to the following effect: "I want to shake off the political tradition and conventionalism. Political unity, above anything else, is a matter of the most urgent necessity in present Japan. I have no impure ambition in my recent appeal for the party combination, and am firmly convinced the movement will surely bear fruits. The programs and methods for it will be made without any artificial efforts."

COOPERATION PLEDGED

After a hot discussion, agreement was reached that the members of the minor parties including the Social Mass party, the former Jikyoku-Doshikai, the First Lobby, and the Unification Advocates of the Seiyukai, will cooperate with Mr. Kuhara in his further efforts toward the party combination. They also decided to hold this sort of meeting often in the future.

The minor parties are of the opinion that since the Nakajima faction cooperated in the 75th Diet Session with them and the Kuhara faction in the movement for completion of the objective of the Sacred War in China, it should not assume cool attitude to the proposal for party combination which is most important for the disposal of the China Affair.

They also assail the Minseito. The platform and the policy of the Minseito, they maintain, are unsuitable in the light of the present situation of the country.

It is certain that the members of the minor parties will shortly enter upon campaign with the Nakajima faction and the Minseito to drive them to the party combination.

With the development of the brisk action on the part of the minor parties, the future movement of the party combination is noteworthy.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - by Ripley

RUMORS DO NOT CIRCULATE IN RIPPLES, SURVEY REVEALS

Rumors do not circulate in ripples as generally believed, but a rumor started at one point first flies to a few other points and then spreads inward within the supposed polygonal space formed by linking these points. Then it may be easily suppressed if measures are taken at the earliest possible time. So said Professor Kanshi Seki of the Tokyo University at the general meeting of the Imperial Academy Monday.

Professor Seki who has made a study of religious philosophy for over 10 years is particularly interested in the study of juvenile psychology.

As one of his experiments, the professor one day told of a dog running away with a lunch-box, to 32 kindergarten children, and let them report the matter to another group of 120 kindergarten children, and watched how the rumor spread. On another occasion he called together 32 primary-school pupils, told them he would take them on an excursion in the near future and surveyed how the report spread among other children in three days' time. In both experiments, Professor Seki's theory was successfully vindicated.

He asserts that all types of rumors may be easily controlled under strong suppression, and that authorities, when they regard some rumor afloat as harmful to the public peace, should stop them as quick as possible.

"As to how rumors go around it has been believed both in Japan and abroad that they proceed in a circular way. The fact that there are similar dialectical words existing in such removed places as the Tohoku and Kyushu districts, has so far been interpreted by the theory of circular spreading of reports. However, according to Professor Seki's theory, these words have the same place of origin, say somewhere around Tokyo, from where the words were transmitted straightway through some means and where they are now quite forgotten. Otherwise there is no clear interpretation for the reason why the same words are non-existent in places between the two localities," said Professor Seki at his own residence in Ogikubo, Suginami ward, Tokyo, during Monday's press interview. He added:

"Then again, it is consequently known from the aforesaid characteristic of rumor that any kind of undesirable reports should be suppressed as quickly as possible by the authorities concerned. The step should be taken when the rumor is still lingering around its disconnected centers such as railway stations or in trains.

"Superstitions, in this connection, are religions of uncultured nations. And their spread can be checked by some psychological method, I am sure."

School Planned For Officials

By way of stressing the Government's effort toward the use of all national resources for successful execution of the China Conflict, an institution will soon appear in which younger Government officials will be reschooled for consciousness of the wartime.

The projected institute is tentatively called "Institute for Executing War with All National Powers" (Soryokusen Kenkyujo), and preparations for its early realization are reported to be under way at the first meeting of the Planning Board.

At the coming school, according to vernaculars, studies will be made under guidance of competent faculty, concerning the fundamental nature of the war to be carried on with all national resources, and the nature of economics, politics and national thought expressed on wartime footing.

This organization will be similar to the Far East Researches Institute, which is under the Government's sponsorship. The faculty will constitute first-rate authorities on various branches of learning.

Keio University Student Lost on Hiking Trip

No traces of Kyosuke Hirata of Kanda Ward, Tokyo City, a Keio University student and the son of Count Hirata, and Kizo Fujita of Takinogawa Ward who were lost last week on a hiking trip, have been found.

Count Hirata and his steward left for Mount Tanigawa when his son did not return on May 12. A searching party composed of Tokyo and Minakami Mountaineering Club members made two unsuccessful attempts to locate their whereabouts.

Science Mobilization Group To Make Debut Soon

A Science Mobilization Association will be organized by leaders of the Japan Industrial Club to cooperate in enforcing the Planning Board's project toward self-sufficiency of materials by developing hidden resources in Japan, Manchoukuo and China.

The proposed organization with an appropriation fund of ¥1,000,000 intends to provide science researchers with necessary chemicals and materials which are unavailable to them due to wartime conditions. In this activity it will be assisted by Government authorities. The association will endeavor to obtain special permission to purchase material otherwise unavailable.

17-Seater Flying Ships For Palau Route Ready

Two Kawanishi-style 17-seater flying ships have been completed for the Yokohama-Saipan-Palau 4,000-kilometer service of the Japan Airways Company.

With four motors and developing a cruising speed of 280 kilometers an hour, there is seating capacity for 17 passengers and a crew of eight including a steward on each ship. There are four sleeping accommodations for passengers. One will be named Kuroshio (Black Tide) and the other Asashio (Morning Tide).

Italians Win Soccer

MILAN, May 6—Italy won the football match against Germany by 3-2 yesterday at the San Siro Stadium here before a huge crowd. At half time the score was 2-1 in in favour of Italy. After the interval Germany drew level but soon afterwards the Italians scored the winning goal.

POLICE CATCH OIL FIRM EMPLOYE WHO EMBEZZLED COMPANY'S FUND

A man who allegedly embezzled ¥1,200,000 out of his company during 20 years and who left a note of confession, and to "end it all" was recently bared by the Metropolitan Police Board with his capture, according to the Yomiuri.

The man is Shintaro Izutsu, 50, vice-chief of the accounts department of the Japan Oil Company at 3-chome, Marunouchi, with a capital of ¥80,000,000. Fearing that the shortage of funds might be discovered Mr. Izutsu disappeared in March last year with a note to his family confessing his crime and professing suicide. But the vice-chief who had been wandering throughout Japan with some of the money he had taken, reappeared to see his family after his funds were spent and was captured by police detectives early this month.

After graduating from commercial school in Niigata Prefecture, Mr. Izutsu entered the Japan Oil Company about 30 years ago and worked his way up to vice-chief of the accounts department.

He took advantage of his position and began to embezzle the company' funds from 1921. Although he was from a well-to-do family, the money he is said to have embezzled was spent for collection of curios which was his hobby.

He also used the funds to play the stock market after repeated losses with his private funds. It is believed he built his pretentious residence in Naitocho, Yotsuya ward, and a villa at Nasu, Fukushima Prefecture with the company's funds.

His friends attribute his extravagance to his father's wealth. He was liked by firm members for his good nature. After company directors learned of the loss, they disposed of Mr. Izutsu's assets totaling ¥400,000 and the remaining deficit was covered by directors.

THE CHOICE OF THE MULTITUDE

MARCH INTO MALMEDY DESCRIBED BY GERMAN

Nazi Soldiers' Welcomed by Citizens Of Town—Still Germans After 20 Years

Transocean

BERLIN, May 11—Marching into the territory of Eupen-Malmedy, land which was once German but which was handed to Belgium by the Treaty of Versailles, German soldiers were most surprised by the German aspect of the town and the cheerful welcome they received from the inhabitants—still German after 20 years. Kurt Frohwin, a German war correspondent attached to the infantry, wrote that "The advance started at 6 a.m. today while the tops of the Eiffel Mountains were still veiled in fog.

"We look ahead into the country which we are to occupy. We are not entering this country as enemies but every act of resistance, regardless of whether it is offered by Belgians, French, or British, will be overcome.

"The frontier barriers are removed. The German infantry, with the scouting mechanized detachments ahead, marches cautiously into the unknown territory. The roads along which we advance are within the area of the former German Eupen-Malmedy region. The motorcyclists move slowly forward along the road which winds its way through the mountainous region.

PEOPLE HAPPY

"Around the bend of the road we come across the first farm-house. A few people rubbing the sleep from their eyes are the first persons we meet on Belgian soil. Just as it was in Poland, so it is here. These country people, after overcoming their first surprise, shout: 'We too are Germans. Now at last we can be Germans again. Put away your pistols.'

"Then the owner of the farm, clad only in his nightshirt and a pair of trousers dashed into the house and shortly afterward reappeared with an Iron Cross which he was awarded during the World War when he served with a Rhonish Infantry regiment. There is little time to talk to this old soldier as we must advance according to schedule.

"We encounter barrier after barrier which the Belgians have erected across the road before retiring. Then the entire valley trembles from a tremendous explosion. The German engineering troops have blown up a stone barrier which was more than 15 feet thick. We run to cover to protect ourselves against the stones which are raining down about the road. Then forward again. Then came the crack of the first machine-gun shots. The fire is aimed at a Belgian reconnaissance detachment. We see the first dead. The further we advance the more German becomes the aspect of the country. First swastika flags appear. Then women and children wave at us out of windows and bring us pails of lemonade and packages of cigarettes. Everywhere German is being spoken.

"Before noon we reach the outskirts of Malmedy. The advance guards cautiously drive forward along the motor highway leading into the town. Malmedy, and its 5,000 inhabitants, looks like any German town in the very heart of the Reich. The people who live there were Germans and always will be Germans. The crowds cheered us as we marched into the town. Our entry was an effective lesson in history. Half an hour later the first picture of the Fuehrer stands decorated with flowers in the window of a house near the public square.

"The crowd sings an old song of the World War: Argonner Wald.

"The German infantry on this day marched between 50 and 60 kilometers forward into enemy territory. A man at the side of the road shouted at us: "Germany cannot lose this war."

ADVANCE INTO HOLLAND

Transocean

BERLIN, May 12—The difficulties of the German troops encountered in crossing the Netherlands canals and the Meuse River are described by the war correspondent Lieutenant Biebrach who was fighting with the German vanguards on Friday morning.

"In their position of readiness close to the frontier the men of the division detailed for the advance across the Netherlands frontier during the night to Friday heard numerous detonations which told of large blasts on the Netherlands side. At last it's 5:35 a.m. The German frontier is crossed. The vanguards receive fire from the right flank and immediately engage in a battle. All along the roads there are barricades. Trees lie across the roads. There are also concrete obstacles—tubes filled with concrete firmly anchored on the road surface by iron rails. But there is nothing which can stop our sappers.

"The Netherlands left nothing undone to check the German advance. There is not a single bridge or passage over even the smallest rivulet which is not blasted. Also the large railway bridges across the Meuse River are destroyed. The blasting of bridges compels the German command to cross the Meuse with the aid of engineer units. The moment when the engineers get ready for crossing they receive fire from the other side. The extensive pillbox system makes the crossing without fight impossible. Water spouts rise up where a hail of bullets strikes the river's surface—it's not at all a comfortable feeling to know our engineers are out there on their air rafts in machine-gun fire.

SILENCE MACHINE-GUNS

"But only once our soldiers can be taken by surprise. From now on armored cars and artillery and heavy arms of a battalion are taking over the protection of the engineers. And thereafter comes success. Our guns in a short time battle down the fire from the pillboxes. Especially machine-guns employed by the Netherlanders make things difficult as they start firing only when our engineers are in midstream. But also machine-guns are silenced.

"Within two hours 17 strongholds of the enemy are eliminated. In the meantime a reconnaissance unit at our right has forced a crossing with cavalry and cyclist units and is advancing. Also our engineers together with their comrades from the infantry have formed a bridgehead and thus the crossing of the Meuse is secured. A few hundred yards upstream is the market place of an ancient little town. In these morning hours it is an assembly place for prisoners, division headquarters and the center for the curious civilian population.

'Almost in the center of the town guns are brought in position. The rattling of window panes makes clear that there is a war on but in general the civilian population appears little concerned. They speak about misfortune but on the other hand also show understanding for the German action."

PHILIPPINE LIBERTY SURE, SAYRE HOLDS

Americans Probably Would Be Unwilling to Pay for Island Defense After '46

N.Y. Times

MANILA—Four months as High Commissioner of the Philippines have convinced Francis B. Sayre that the United States will not remain permanently here, and probably will carry out the present act under which the islands will receive their independence in 1946, according to an interview published here recently.

Mr. Sayre believes that neither the fear of Japanese aggression nor the practical certainty of "grave economic dislocation" to the Philippines owing to the loss of the free American market will result in a reversal of the present program.

Mr. Sayre's interview was given on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the American-owned Manila Daily Bulletin. His views now more than ever appear to be diametrically opposed to those of his predecessor, Paul V. McNutt, who advocated a re-examination of the Philippine problem leading probably to outright permanent retention of the Philippines as American territory.

One of Mr. Sayre's principal reasons for believing in American departure from the islands in 1946 is the probable unwillingness of the American taxpayers to support the necessary Philippine defense force.

SAYS PEOPLE WANT TO BE FREE

"As naval and aerial warfare develop in the future, additional millions must be poured into defenses if they are to be kept abreast of advancing technique," said Mr. Sayre.

"If we do not learn to supplant war by effective methods of international cooperation, I wonder whether it is going to be practicable for any nation to undertake to maintain and defend the kind of far-flung military empires which developed during the 18th and 19th centuries."

Viewing the local situation broadly, Mr. Sayre said:

"It's unlikely that we will see the Philippine Assembly or the Filipino people denying the hopes and aspirations to which they tenaciously clung for over forty years. The movement toward independence is like the flow of a great river which has carried both people (Americans and Filipinos) along in its current. They have been carried along to a point from which it would be difficult now to turn back. I do not believe the Filipinos would voluntarily relinquish any of the autonomy they now enjoy.

"In fact I think they would be unwilling to accept, following 1946, any form of government or even dominion which would restrict them in what they now enjoy. Remember President Quezon's statement before the Assembly last month. The only kind of arrangement he said he would be willing to consider would be one giving the Filipinos full control over immigration, imports, exports, currency and related financial subjects, as well as the right to conclude commercial treaties with other nations without being subjected to the supervision and control of the United States.

DOUBTS NEW PLAN IS POSSIBLE

"In short, the tide has carried both Americans and Filipinos to a point where the only kind of dominion status the Philippines would probably be willing to accept would be one which the United States could not grant."

Asked if the fear of aggression from Japan might not change the views of the Filipinos, Mr. Sayre said:

"Of course no one can foretell the future. The world might be so different in 1946 that everything I have been saying would have to be thrown out the window. Unless conditions change very materially however, I would be much surprised to see the Philippine Assembly vote to reconsider the present independence program."

Turning to the possibility that the American Congress might change the Tydings-McDuffie Law which supposedly settled the independence matter, Mr. Sayre went on:

"I feel sure that many members of Congress would seriously be swayed by the wishes of the Filipino people. At the same time I do not see any present lessening of the strength of the various groups in Congress which pressed for passage of the independence act. Some of them are even stronger than in 1934. And don't forget that it takes an affirmative vote of both houses of Congress to make a change."

Fine Arts School Graduates Donate Painting to Navy

"Billows," a large oil painting executed by 12 graduates of this year from the Tokyo Fine Arts school will be donated to the Navy on Navy Day, May 27 by the young artists.

The graduates who are now working on the painting are members of the 2,600th Year Society, formed by more than 30 graduates this year of the Tokyo Fine Arts School. To execute the painting they lived two weeks through the influence of the Navy Ministry's press section at the prefectural fishing training camp at Katsuura, Chiba Prefecture.

While at Kastuura, the artists sailed occasionally on the sea to study the objects of their painting. After their return to Tokyo they began their work on No. 150 size canvas. The painting represents two billows, one large and one small. "Billows" will be on exhibit May 27 at the Tokyo Prefectural Gallery at Uyeno together with more than 80 other sketches made by the students while in Katsuura.

'Blue Book' of Japan Abandons July Issue

The directory of Government officials, the blue book of Japan, regularly issued in January and July every year, will not be issued in July, it was decided Thursday at the regular meeting of administrative officials held at the Premier's official residence.

The officials, after discussing various questions regarding the Government's economy in the use of paper, agreed on two items in paper economy, besides cancellation of the July issuance of the blue book.

Publications of various types and sizes, which are issued by many Government offices will be abolished permanently or temporarily excepting those of urgent nature and economy will be practised for other kinds of paper consumption in Government offices.

den. The communique of the Norwegian high command says that the Allied use of tanks has achieved excellent results and that German attempts to drop parachute supplies have failed.

NORTHERN CAMPAIGN

LONDON, May 17—The War Office announced today: "The Allied forces continue to make successful advance in the Bjerbik area and have occupied the north shore of Rombaks fjord about Eijford. Parties of the enemy have been seen withdrawing eastward toward the Swedish frontier."

The Admiralty announced today: "Naval aircraft attacked enemy fuel supplies in the Bergen area yesterday. The destruction of tanks at Alorgaaspyant, some of which had been demolished in previous attacks, was completed. Two tanks at Strudhavan were blown up. A further two at Knarven were set on fire. All our aircraft returned safely."

The War Office announced this morning that the Second Contingent of the Second Australian Imperial Force is disembarking in Egypt and proceeding to Palestine.

FIGHTING AT AVESNES

PARIS, May 17—Tonight's communique reads as follows: "Today the German attack developed on a massive scale not only in Belgium but also in the regions of Avesnes and Vervins. On those fronts the enemy engaged the greater part of their heavy tank divisions. The battle took on the aspect of a veritable melee. Further to the east the enemy attacked in the region of Sedan and Montmedy without success.

In close collaboration with the R.A.F. our aviation continued its energetic and effacious action against land troops, road junctions and railways. While assuring the protection of our troops, our fighters were also engaged in numerous encounters in the air. Many enemy planes have been shot down. In the present circumstances of open warfare it is not possible to know the exact numbers."

China and Dominican Republic Sign Treaty

United Press

CIUDAD TRUJILLO, Dominican Republic, May 12—Diplomatic relations between the oldest nation of the Orient and the oldest country of the New World were established yesterday with the signing of a Treaty of Amity between the Dominican Republic and China.

The Chinese Minister to Cuba, Dr. T. T. Li, signed the pact on behalf of the Chinese Republic, while the Dominican Secretary of State, Senor Arturo Despradel, signed for the Government of this country.

Six hundred Chinese nationals who reside here held a celebration to commemorate the occasion.

N.Y. Times

ROME, April 19—The train from France ran through the Simplon Tunnel straight into the Spring. On one side of that dark passage the skies were gray, the air was sharp, the buds on the trees hesitated in the act of bursting into leaf. In Paris the prolonged cold forced the government to postpone from April 1 to the fifteenth and then to the first of May the wartime order to turn off the heat.

And the French mood is as bleak the weather. A nation at arms, all life subordinated to one grim business, France stands waiting and ready for the expected blow. Even a train window view of the French countryside is enough to show how completely the man power and women power are mobilized. The waiters in the restaurant car are half-grown boys. In the villages you see only women. Whether they are serving hot wine at the station to the troops in transit, or working in the fields, their eyes and their thoughts are always turned elsewhere.

Then quite suddenly you are on the other side of the Alps. The skies are blue, the orchards are in full bloom. Beside the railroad a group of masons building a wall sing as the chips fly upward in the warm air. At Stresa the hills are green around the placid reaches of a lake that has forgotten Locarno, the Stresa Front and all the abortive gestures of the troubled armistice we thought was peace. It has apparently forgotten also the advancing war.

NO COUNTRIES NEUTRAL

After long months of Winter and war the first glimpse of the Italian Spring is like an awakening from a dreadful dream. For three months this reporter has seen nothing, heard nothing, felt nothing but war. Weeks before Hitler pounced on Denmark and Norway it was evident to the most casual traveler that there are no neutral countries on this Continent. Wherever you go in the Balkans or the Low Countries, quite as much as in England, France and Germany, there is war.

Back in Italy, what startles most is not the Spring, heavenly though it is, but the completely normal aspect of the towns, the streets and the people. Here plenty of young men are working in the fields and doing the jobs women have taken over everywhere else. In the big stations at Milan, Bologna and Florence only an occasional soldier is to be seen among the throngs of civilians. If you step into an old church or an ancient palace you are sure to find it in the process of restoration. The treasures have been removed from the museums in nearly every city of Europe, save in Rome and Florence.

The Italian people will certainly be shocked if they wake up some morning and find themselves at war. If the country is preparing to enter the fray, there is no outward sign of it. Yet this is only part of the story. The contrast between the aspect of Rome and that of other capitals is not more striking than the contradiction between what one sees and what one reads and hears.

You leave France celebrating Allied victories and the next day in Italy these victories are either played down or celebrated as defeats. The Italian press received orders to headline German successes the day before Hitler invaded Norway—a pretty clear indication that Rome was apprised of what was about to happen. But the included instructions to soft-pedal Russia and not to mention the Axis, and this adds to the sum of contradictions which make the situation in Rome confusing, baffling and perilous.

Seen from the Pincian Hill today, St. Peter's dome floats in the golden air and the Judas trees on the Palatine are like a coral frieze against the blue, but under this timeless beauty runs a current of danger, a sense that the balance between peace and war is trembling. As the state of alarm spreads and intensifies over Europe so that the ground shakes under one's feet, Italy is nervously aware that her hour of decision is at hand.

THE CONTRADICTIONS IN ITALY

There is no doubt that events are forcing Premier Mussolini to make a choice on which the future of his regime, of Italy and perhaps of Europe depends. The contradiction between the press policy, underlined by yesterday's conspicuous announcement that military consultations are in progress between Germany and Italy, and the equally conspicuous absence of extraordinary military preparations corresponds to a fundamental contradiction in the position and the mind of this country. The laws of logic and the will of the people, supported by the influence of the church, the monarchy and important leaders in the Fascist party, combine to hold Italy back from war. Joining the Allies has never been a real possibility, but the prospect of staying out and waiting for both sides to weaken themselves in an exhausting struggle has certainly allured this government.

It still allures. On the other side is the undoubted fact that Mussolini believes that Hitler will win the war. What's happening in Scandinavia fortifies that belief, for the feeling in the ruling circles here is that Germany has dug in Southern Norway and has little interest in holding the north. Add the further fact that Mussolini is still the absolute master of this country and it is easy to see why the beauty and uniquely normal aspect of the land are a lovely illusion. This is the fateful moment before the plunge.

U.S. PRINTING HISTORY NOW BEING COMPILED

Douglas C. McMurtrie Typographical Expert, Studies Old Publications

By JOHN C. BOND

Christian Science Monitor

Because Douglas McMurtrie had a hobby it may be necessary to rewrite a good deal of American history. And it will be better history, more vivid with human anecdote, eloquent speeches, and canny politics.

Douglas C. McMurtrie is a typographical expert. His hobby is the recorder of history. He originated the project to record all the early American printing from the beginning of the press in the United States through 1876, and, as he expected, much that was new has been turned up and many gaps filled in.

Mr. McMurtrie, director of typograph of the Ludlow Typograph Company, traces his interest in printing back to college days and his editing of the yearbook at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In the years since, his books about printing have included "A History of Printing in the United States," "The Book: the Story of Printing and Bookmaking," and "The Beginnings of the American Newspaper." He has also designed a number of widely used type faces.

In 1936 Mr. McMurtrie journeyed to Nashville, Tenn., to address the Southern Historical Association. He told the historians how he had discovered in his exploration into the history of American printing that knowledge of facts on the subject was scarce. Dr. Luther H. Evans, National Director of the Historical Records Survey of the WPA, was present and asked Mr. McMurtrie what could be done. Right then was born the American Imprints Inventory, a project to find, describe, and note the location of a copy of every discoverable book and pamphlet printed from the beginning of the press in America through the centennial year of 1876.

The magnitude of the job is indicated by the fact that in a library like Harvard's Widener—one of some 3,000 libraries already inventoried—there are about 4,000,000 cards in the card catalogue; every one had to be read and checked. Yet work in this library has been completed.

Headquarters were opened in Chicago and the job started under WPA auspices, with 30 workers. It didn't take long to discover that 30 persons working at a few points couldn't make much of an impression on thousands of libraries throughout the United States. So the number of workers was soon increased to almost 2,000.

So much for the background; right here, the unfoldment of Mr. McMurtrie's idea really begins. The men and women going through the musty files of small country book stacks as well as large university and municipal libraries are not finding things dry as dust. Some of the publications they unearth tell at first hand of events of days which have been woven into American history.

Much valuable information was printed in pamphlet form. The life of a pamphlet, regardless of its importance, is usually brief. In his study of the history of American printing, Douglas McMurtrie discovered that not a single copy could be found of many important pamphlets known to have been printed and that many were represented by a single known copy surviving in some remote place.

The only known surviving copy of the earliest pamphlet known to have been printed in Cleveland, Ohio, was found by Inventory workers in the Congregational Library on Beacon Street in Boston, and a rare early publication of the Chicago press was found in Boston in the Diocesan Library of the Protestant Episcopal Church on Joy Street. Similarly long-lost publications of early colonial days have turned up in libraries all the way to the Pacific.

In one library was found the long-sought "Constitution and Ordinances" of the short-lived rump State of West Florida, printed at Natchez in 1810. A worker in Philadelphia encounters a pamphlet printed in 1869 in Carson City, Nevada, reporting a speech by a western politician on woman suffrage.

Hardly a day passes without recording the discovery of a publication which some scholar has been hunting for years. Whether his interest be fire insurance or religion, glass making or agriculture, the drama or gold mining, the WPA's American Imprints Inventory is busy turning up material.

All titles recorded by the field workers are first sent to field headquarters, which in Massachusetts is located in the old Sharp School Building on Beacon Hill. There they are typed, proof-read, duplicates filed, and the originals sent to the central offices in Chicago.

Each slip shows by Union Catalogue symbols the library in which the imprint was found. When examined in Chicago, if the same title has been reported from a number of places, the location symbols are consolidated on a single slip. All locations are later reported to the Union Catalogue of the Library of Congress for permanent record.

Lists of the early printing in individual states are being deposited in important libraries throughout the country, where they may be freely consulted. Lists of the early imprints of Missouri, Minnesota, Arizona, Chicago, Kentucky, Nevada, Alabama, New Jersey, and Kansas have been completed, and work on lists for Rhode Island, Ohio, Oregon, Michigan, and Tennessee is far advanced.

The accuracy of WPA work on this program is high. Supervisors explain that this results from careful planning and painstaking checking all along the line. The lists have won the approval of American librarians and historians.

As the work of the American Imprints Inventory continues, Mr. McMurtrie predicts that the published results will double the volume of available historical information on many subjects, saving much research time.

"The transformation in the lives of the workers on the Inventory, many of whom have been rescued from idleness and given an opportunity to participate in worthwhile activity, is little short of inspiring," Mr. McMurtrie says.

"For example, a man well past middle years, of cultured background, had tried in vain for five years to find employment. He was given a job on the Inventory project. He entered into it with enthusiasm, and has had three promotions. He could not be more interested if it were his personal business."

750 M.P.H. PLANE SPEED IS SEEN

Admiral Towers Tells U.S. Senators Such Rate Ultimate Maximum

N.Y. Times

WASHINGTON, April 19—Rear Admiral John H. Towers, the navy's ranking aeronautical officer, today predicted the ultimate development of airplanes capable of 750 miles an hour—12½ miles a minute, or about the speed of sound. The Senate Naval Affairs Committee was told that research indicated this to be the maximum potential airplane speed.

Testifying in connection with the House-approved Vinson bill to authorize an 11 per cent expansion in the fleet, the chief of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics predicted that airplane plants in this country will be producing 25,000 planes a year by the end of 1940. American manufacturers produced only 3,600 aircraft in 1938.

Increased production facilities, Admiral Towers said, made possible by the government's policy of releasing late-model fighting planes for sale to European belligerents, primarily England and France. Foreign nations, he said, have ordered about 7,000 planes since the war began, of which about 3,000 have been shipped.

DEFENDS RELEASES TO ALLIES

Under critical questioning by Senator Hiram W. Johnson, the witness vigorously defended the policy, which, he said, was developed first by the War Department and then applied to the navy on orders of President Roosevelt.

Admiral Towers testified after Senator Byrnes revealed plans to seek an immediate appropriation of $6,000,000 to modernize guns and armor of the navy's three oldest battleships, the Texas, New York and Arkansas. They are being used as training ships and the navy has not openly requested modernization.

Senator Byrnes predicted prompt approval of his proposal, citing the Senate's action yesterday in passing by 63 to 4 the $963,797,487 Navy Appropriation Bill for 1941.

When the battleships North Carolina, Washington and Indiana, scheduled to be completed in 1941, 1942 and 1943, respectively, were ordered constructed it was planned to use them to replace the Arkansas, Texas and New York. The Arkansas is 28 years old; the New York and Texas are 26 years old.

NOW USED AS TRAINING SHIPS

The Arkansas, Texas and New York are assigned to the Atlantic squadron, but each year they are used as training ships for midshipmen on their summer cruises.

Senator Byrnes said that additional armor and an increased gun range would make the three ships fit for the battle line. Jane's Fighting Ships, authoritative publication of the world's navies, says, however, that the New York and the Texas, since some major alterations in 1926-27, are "slow, hard to handle and bad sea boats in rough weather."

If they are retained, the navy will have twenty-three battleships when the present ships under construction are completed. Eight are under construction and two more of 45,000 tons are provided for in the 1941 Naval Appropriation Bill adopted by the Senate yesterday.

Admiral Towers was succeeded on the witness stand by Rear Admiral Samuel Robinson, chief of the navy's engineering bureau. He said the authorizations contained in the Vinson Bill were needed "to get the rounded-out fleet we want."

The nation's shipbuilding facilities are adequate to handle the 11 per cent expansion, he said, and could be enlarged in two years to accommodate the 25 per cent expansion the navy seeks.

KIDNAPING WAVE CONTINUES IN SHANGHAI AS IN 1929

Hangchow Hotels Open and Japanese Military Issuing Passes to Visitors

By K. M. STEINER
Japan Times Correspondent

SHANGHAI, May 14—Laugh of the week in police and press circles here was created by one of four armed robbers who wielded a hand-grenade when intimidating the occupants of a Chinese home two or three days back. After having stolen about $200, he addressed the victims as follows, while wildly gesticulating with his dangerous weapon: "If you dare to raise an alarm, I will throw this bomb and not only will all of you die but your relatives will not even be able to sell this house to cover funeral expenses since it will also be destroyed."

He had hardly finished his little speech when, feeling a bit nervous, he dropped the hand-grenade accidentally. Nothing happened except that the victims raised the alarm and the would-be grenade-thrower was arrested and now has 18 months in which to think things over in a not too comfortable cell at Ward Road Gaol.

The epidemic of kidnapings is continuing and is reminiscent of a similar wave of crime which was stamped out after tedious work on the part of the police, late in 1929. It appears that undesirable characters who thrived during the hostilities now see their sphere of action drastically curtailed as a result of organized crime-fighting in Chinese territories as well as in foreign areas. They have devised this new means of getting rich quick but until today they have not always succeeded. Using taxis the thugs invest about $10 each time in these attempts, to cover car-fare and tips to drivers. If they are not so fortunate in their haul, they at least always obtain enough money from the pockets of their victims, to cover these expenses, and since the new police force which is to maintain law and order in the western districts is not yet in operation, they have little difficulty in escaping the police by making the getaway on municipal roads as the Shanghai Municipal Police is not permitted to follow them into Chinese territory. However, since it is believed that by the end of the month, the new police force will be in existence and crime will then be on the decrease.

Meanwhile everyone who has come to love the beautiful lake-city of Hangchow are pleased that hoteirys are again advertising that they cater to foreign residents in Shanghai. To be confined within the walls of dust and smoke in Shanghai for three years is no picnic and the Japanese military authorities are making friends among foreigners here by having authorized the opening of the hotels and issuing passes to those who want to see Hangchow.

* * *

That Shanghai and its outskirts are rapidly returning to normal notwithstanding the drop in the value of the Chinese dollar is evident by the large number of buildings that are going up everywhere. Most ambitious project is the new railway station now under construction in Kiangwan, which will facilitate goods and passenger traffic to a great extent.

But the Shanghai Municipal Council is also doing its utmost to reduce expenses by giving notice to a large number of their employes now holding high positions. As a rule, these drastic cuts in the foreign staff are criticized here although these criticisms are far from justified. Employes given marching orders, withdraw handsome amounts from their Superannuation holdings while, in accordance with their contracts of employment, they are being paid pensions which will keep them well above water for the rest of their lives. The efficiency of the S.M.C. does not suffer by the departure of these employes most of whom are not sorry that they have been asked to go.

As forecast in my last week's dispatch, trouble on the labor front continued brewing in Shanghai when early this week, 3,000 employes of the Public Works Department, S.M.C., left their work and went on strike in order to get an increased rice allowance. In this connection, I learned from authoritative sources that most of the strikers were not in the least willing to stop work but were forced to do so as result of intimidation on the part of professional agitators and part-time employes who want permanent jobs. The strikers are composed mostly of coolies and skilled workers employed in road repairs, garbage and ordure removal and such other essential services. They only recently received increases in their rice allowances and the lack of enthusiasm shown by the strikers may be gauged from the fact that four days after walking out they had not even submitted demands to the Council. All they have done, was to expound their grievances in the Chinese press, which can scarcely be taken as a genuine attempt to arrive at a satisfactory settlement.

The third meeting of the Standing Committee of the Overseas Chinese Affairs Commission was held on Sunday morning in Nanking, according to Chinese press reports published here. Mr. Chen Tsi-chang, chairman, opened the meeting at which Messrs. Yen Chia-pao, Li Chung-yao, and Peng Shou, attended.

Measures of relief for unemployed Overseas Chinese were discussed and it was resolved that the publication of "Overseas Chinese Affairs", a weekly magazine, be resumed on June 15.

An appeal for more students was made by Ministry of Interior in Nanking, for the Training School of District Magistrates, since the improvement of administrative efficiency in all parts of the country is being energetically sought by Mr. Chen Chun, Minister of Interior. The school, it will be recalled, was opened some time ago and two groups of students have already graduated and taken up their posts.

Although gasoline is not rationed in Shanghai, most Shanghailanders find it to their advantage now to make as little use of their cars as possible with a gallon of the precious liquid costing no less than $3.50 and with taxes on all vehicles being due for a hike in July. The cost of living is steadily increasing, as I already mentioned in previous dispatches, and night-clubs as well as other places of amusements are beginning to feel the pinch. It is true that business is excellent and that more money is being made but the average salaried man derives no advantage from this state of affairs and basing it on the purchasing value of the local dollar, many find that they are earning less today than was the case ten or more years ago. At the same time, visitors with American or British currency to these shores find life here exceedingly cheap since a U.S. dollar now buys $20 local currency while a Pound Sterling is worth more than $60.

Painting Pipes Remedy Cause of Impure Water

By painting the interior of celluloid pipes and conduits the cause of impure and unsanitary water attributed to deposition from corrosion by chemical composition was remedied recently by the Osaka City Hygienic Laboratory Engineers.

The Water Department ordered 6,000 meters of celluloid water mains measuring 13 millimeters in diameter and 25 in length through the Dai Nippon Celluloid Company. Celluloid mains are as pliable as lead ones and are three to five meters in length.

The cost per meter of 90 sen is far cheaper than the ¥1.60 of lead ones and its superiority to the latter was proved when it withstood a fire test. A patent has been applied for and further tests to prove its value in other fields are being made to make its use a boom to plumbing business.

BRITISH PAPER BACKS WORLD FEDERATION

World Review, First Monthly Journal in London of Kind, Started on Fleet Street

Christian Science Monitor

LONDON — World Review, the first monthly journal to be published in Britain devoted to the idea of World Federation, has been launched here.

Vernon Bartlett, M.P., foreign affairs expert and friend of Clarence Streit who promoted the Federal Union idea in America, John Sutro are joint editors. This magazine, with its first 1940 issue, became the official organ of the Federal Union Club—an organization recently started here for the wider discussion of the Federal Union idea. This Club supports, but is distinct from the Federal Union movement itself, which has its own weekly news sheet.

NATIONALISM AND WAR

The linking of World Review with the project of world federation is seen as an appropriate development in the career of a journal devoted for many years to the furtherance of international affairs of various kinds. As "World" it was first published 5½ years ago, and Mr. Bartlett was among the contributors to the inaugural issue. Later, with the title changed to World Review of Reviews it absorbed the historic Review of Reviews, which had had among its editors at various times such famous journalists as W. T. Stead and Wickman Steed. Subsequently as its aims expanded its title contracted and it became World Review.

In the first number of World, back in 1934, Mr. Bartlett wrote prophetically, "Acute nationalism will either collapse or lead to war. In both cases the more we know of our neighbors the better. . . . It is the earnest hope of those of us who are connected with this new review that it will help its readers to retain breadth of mind and sanity of judgment at a time when almost every appeal is to intolerance and mistrust, prejudice and hatred."

When hostilities began last September, it seemed as though the publication must close down. The disaster against which it had raised a warning voice month after month threatened to envelop it.

"It seemed so much easier to fade as gracefully as possible out of the picture," Mr. Bartlett wrote in the January, 1940, issue, "than to struggle toward the foreground in order to be in a position to remind people that, sooner or later, they would once again be faced with the age-long problem of making peace."

But it was decided that the review could not close down because the world had entered another period of "intolerance and mistrust, prejudice and hatred." So after much deliberation it became the official organ of the Federal Union Club.

A FORUM FOR ISSUES

Which means what? Vernon Bartlett answers the question in the first issue: 'It means that, since no man can foretell the exact nature of the next machine to be constructed in the hope of abolishing war, we want to provide a forum in which blue prints of the machine can be discussed, and possibly drafted."

In this way it is hoped to find out whether people are ready to surrender national sovereignty to the extent implied in talk of federal union; to discuss whether the present League Covenant can be modified so that fatal handicaps to its efficient working are removed; to try to decide whether it is better still to support a League of Nations despite the blame and ridicule poured upon it; or to start off with a new label on the bottle; or whether on the other hand, in the federal union idea there is something so novel that the contents of the bottle as well as the label would be new.

The pages of this journal are to be open to discussion of such questions by men and women "who would consider life had lost most of its flavor if they had to abandon the struggle to make it more secure, more contented, more full of opportunity for the great masses of people whose struggle for a livelihood leaves them so little time in which to express their thoughts."

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - by Ripley

N.Y. PAPER HINTS AMERICA SHOULD FIGHT GERMANY

Senator Johnson Foresees United States at War; Fifth Column Actions Seen

United Press

NEW YORK, May 17—The New York Herald Tribune yesterday hinted that the United States should declare war against Germany "as the least costly solution" to the European situation.

"It is quite probable that the least costly solution would be to declare war on Germany at once and help defend the line the Allies are now holding at such sacrifice," the newspaper said in an editorial. "That would have a tremendous moral effect— on both sides and perhaps decisively affect Italy."

SENATOR'S VIEW

United Press

WASHINGTON, May 17—Senator Hiram Johnson, California Republican, at yesterday's session of the Senate Naval Affairs Committee expressed the opinion that the United States would soon be a belligerent in the European war. Senator Johnson is also a member of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The veteran senator's remark was made while the Assistant Secretary of Navy, Louis Compton, was testifying before the committee.

Mr. Compton was urging the committee to approve a bill drafted by the Navy Department with a view to consolidating various naval construction bureaus in the interests of efficiency. Explaining that the bill's passage would speed the national re-armament program, Mr. Compton said: "Time is of the essence with conditions as they are today."

"Yes," was Senator Johnson's comment on this, "we will be in the war very soon.

"That's your opinion, isn't it, Mr. Compton?" he asked.

"No, no," the Assistant Secretary Replied. "I certainly hope not."

In his argument in favor of greater centralization of the direction of naval construction work, Mr. Compton said that under the present system responsibility was too much divided.

"Contractors often are required to spend a week running around the Navy Department consulting various department heads in order to accomplish something they should be able to do in a half day," he said.

FIFTH COLUMN IN U.S.

United Press

WASHINGTON, May 17—Representative Martin Dies, Texas Democrat and Chairman of the House Committee for Investigation of Un-American Activities, today declared that an alien "fifth column" menaced the safety of the United States.

Calling attention to the effective aid German residents in Holland and Norway rendered the German Army in its attacks on those countries, Mr. Dies alleged that the "fifth column movement" in the United States is better organized than in any other country of the world.

He announced his intention to introduce in Congress a measure which he said would deal with the menace "in a constitutional way."

PROOF OF ISOLATIONISM

United Press

WASHINGTON, May 17—The State Department's suggestion that American citizens in Europe return to the United States should not be considered as a move to intervene in the European war, but only a proof of America's strict isolationism, informed sources said here last night.

The American Government will order special vessels to call at certain ports for American citizens evacuating Europe, the State Department announced.

SCHLIEFFEN PLAN REALIZED: 'STRENGTHEN RIGHT WING'

Great German Strategist's Plan Carried Out This Time, Says Nazi Military Expert

Transocean

BERLIN, May 15—By forcing the capitulation of Holland, the German high command has brought about the condition visualized by the creator of the strategic plan against France, General Count Alfred Schlieffen, who died in 1913. It was this great strategist that on his death-bed cried out: "Strengthen the right wing."

In the World War, at the critical moment, the right wing was not strong enough, but the great strategist's demand has been met in this campaign; the military picture has been decisively altered in Germany's favor, experts said here today.

Strong German forces have been released from Holland to reinforce the right wing of the German Army operating in Northern Belgium. In addition Germany now holds the Netherlands airports which are only 200 kilometers distant from the British coast. With these facts in mind, the German public is today watching with confidence the great battle which is developing in front of Brussels, along the Dyle River positions.

German newspapers are emphasizing that the distance from Rotterdam to London is exactly 336 kilometers, that the German Army has penetrated into France, that as a result of Holland's capitulation, the Belgian flank is threatened, and that Britain itself might now experience the reality of the war which it light-heartedly declared on Germany and which it has attempted to keep from its own soil by using others to fight for it and by constantly shifting the war from one scene to another.

B. Z. am Mittag points out that the warplanes of the Reich can cover the distance between Rotterdam and England in 30 minutes. Also the German air force can now control the channel at any time it finds necessary.

Der Angriff prophesizes that the world is about to witness a unique military achievement surpassing even the German advance of 1914 because this time General Schlieffen's great plan is being carried through by men of genius.

FUTURE OUTLINED

Transocean

BERLIN, May 15—From an authoritative German military source Transocean received this morning a review of past war events and a forecast of what is likely to happen in the future.

It would be erroneous to assume that events in the coming days and weeks would be with only small alterations on the line of those in the same fighting zone of August 1914. Motorization and mechanization, but especially modern air warfare, have revolutionized everything, so that new formations of troops and new methods of warfare have arisen.

It is natural that the German forces have made use of the valuable practical experiences from the campaigns in Poland and Norway and that they are employing them now in the operations in the West. The campaigns in Poland and Norway have shown clearly enough that strong frontal attacks have been numerous "shock wedges" operating more or less independently. The same may be expected in the West.

From this viewpoint the results of the first three days of the German offensive in the West show that most of the northern German shock troops reached the northern coast of Holland near Harlingen and the entire eastern shore of the Zuider Sea.

PENETRATE IJSSEL

The adjoining southern shock troops succeeded in penetrating quickly the first Dutch fortification barrier of Ijssel in the Deventer and Arnhem district and in fighting their way at several points through the second barrier, the so-called Grebbe Line between the south coast of the Zuider Sea and Rhonen on the northern branch of the Rhine estuary in the direction of Utrecht.

A shock group advancing in the south of the Rhine estuary was able to reach the district south of Rotterdam in forced marches over Tilburg and north of Breda. There it established contact with strong German units taken on the first day of fighting by air to the Rotterdam area.

In Belgium the decisive blow was successful in spite of stubborn resistance, a crossing of the Albert Canal west of Maastricht and on both sides of Hasselt was enforced. This attack was accompanied by a surprising invasion from the north of the fortress of Liege. On May 12 the citadel of Liege fell into German hands.

After overpowering the first line of pillboxes on the frontiers, the German army was able to gain ground quickly south of Liege in spite of enemy resistance.

Examining the results of the fourth day, various achievements come clearly into the foreground. In the first place it must be stated that just as on the first three days the German air force with strong units continued its surprise attacks, destroying alone on May 13 about 150 enemy airplanes.

The center of German air attacks on May 13, was the French sector of the Meuse where troop concentrations, armored car masses, ammunition depots and transports as well as communications were smashed in uninterrupted assaults by high and low-flying units. It may be taken for granted that the enemy air weapon was most seriously hit by the disastrous attacks of the German air force which caused the enemy about 1,200 planes in the first four days.

Already last Monday the union of German troops advancing from the south of Holland could be reported with the German forces in Rotterdam landed by air. This was the first penetration of the fortress of Holland and resulted from the cooperation of the forces on the ground and in the air.

The occupation of Roozendaal south of the Meuse estuary meant the interruption of the main communications by road and railway from Rotterdam to Amsterdam, on the same Monday the far-reaching effects of the German penetration of the Belgian Albert Canal position became apparent on both sides of Hasselt.

ALBERT CANAL FALLS

The result is that today the Albert Canal position must be regarded as fallen as the Belgians are on a quick retreat from the Canal. Pursuing German troops have already reached the Dyle position, a powerful barrier of fortifications in Central Belgium reaching from Lier southeast of Antwerp via Louvain to Namur and along the Meuse, and which is supposed to protect Brussels. This position is also said to be the first main fighting position for Anglo-French forces.

In Southern Belgium German troops also gained ground quickly. Today it is certain that the wooded Ardennes which are regarded as a natural obstacle have been already taken by German troops and that the Meuse has been reached on the Belgian-French frontier between Namur and Givet. The southern wing of this shock troop has already reached and partly crossed the frontier between France and Belgium as well as between France and Luxembourg. The crossing of the Meuse was also carried out successfully at some points.

A review of the operations in the West allows the conclusion that so far French and British troops did not succeed in supporting Belgian and Dutch advance troops in their fortified positions. The two latter armies are already repulsed so that the German forces are now getting into touch with the Anglo-French main forces which have been arriving in the meanwhile and a greater collision is now expectable with them on the line, Antwerp, Namur and the Meuse. There is serious fighting ahead, but the German nation is looking forward with confidence.

Spiritual Mobilizers Invited to Inspect Secret Army Weapons

About 12,000 persons engaged in the national spiritual mobilization campaign will be invited by the Tokyo Municipal Office to inspect modern weapons which have been kept secret, and sham battles in the compound of the Toyama Military School from May 28 to June 1.

The invited persons will be divided into five groups, each of which will inspect modern weapons and maneuvers in poison gas attacks and anti-aircraft gun operation and other phases of modern warfare. Lectures also will be given by Army experts on scientific warfare.

Thus, equipped with a new knowledge about war, the national spiritual mobilization officials will be better qualified to guide the citizens to cope with the wartime conditions, it is expected.

Y.S.C. NINE LOSES TO Y.C.A.C. TEAM

The Yokohama Sport Club's baseball team lost to a nine comprised in the main of the Yokohama Country and Athletic Club second string players by 14 to 3 on the St. Joseph's College diamond Sunday morning. The losers, handicapped by the absence of some of their regulars, were no match for their intra-city rivals.

The winners took the lead in the first inning by scoring three runs, and this advantage proved sufficient to win. The Y.S.C. players reduced the margin to a single point in the third inning by pushing across one run in both the initial and third stanzas. Kondo held the opposition scoreless in the second, third and fourth frames, but a six-run barrage in the fifth forced him to retire, Vanchurin then taking over the hurling assignment. The latter also fared badly, and P. Blamey replaced him after one inning to pitch the rest of the game. J. Eyton and G. Beatty shared the mound duty for the winners.

The line-ups were as follows:

Yokohama Sport Club: S. Sano, F. Kondo, F. da Rosa, J. Vanchurin, H. Asahina, K. Naruse, P. Blamey, D. Britto and J. Ahrens.

Opposition: W. Blamey, G. Beatty, E. Crane, P. Fehlen, J. Eyton, A. Salter, H. Salter, S. Bielous and L. Olito.

Danish Navy Chief to Resign

Transocean

COPENHAGEN, May 11—It is reported that the Commander-in-chief of the Danish Navy, Vice-Admiral Rechnitzen, contemplates to resign on June 11. His successor will be Rear-Admiral Briand de Prevequeur, Chief of the Coast Guard Fleet, who in turn will presumably be succeeded by the chief of the Coastal Defenses, Commander Paul Ipsen.

The Chief of Staff of the Navy, Rear-Admiral Hammerich, will, it is stated, remain at his post.

Dupont Dynamite Warehouse Burns

United Press

GIBBTOWN, New Jersey, May 18—A blaze broke out in the Dupont dynamite materials warehouse yesterday, but was soon extinguished. The origin of the fire could not be ascertained immediately.

The fire started in the same plant where two workers were killed by a nitro-glycerin blast several months ago.

American Citizens Not to Leave Europe via Italy

Transocean

NEW YORK, May 16—With reference to the request to American citizens in West and South Europe to return to the United States, today's papers report that these citizens were advised to leave Europe either from Bordeaux or from Spanish or Portuguese ports.

So far U.S. citizens have been leaving from Genoa, but owing to the danger of Italy entering the war, Washington ordered its citizens to leave from the above mentioned ports.

The State Department also announced that it was making preparations for sending U.S. vessels for taking American citizens home. So far American vessels were prohibited to call at Bordeaux or other ports in war zones.

P.I. Shipping Magnet Leaves Washington

United Press

WASHINGTON, May 17—E. H. Pirovano, owner of the De La Rama shipping line, departed for the west coast yesterday after making intensive appeals to United States maritime officials to extend "emergency aid" to Philippine trade lanes to the United States.

Mr. Pirovano, interviewed by the United Press, said developments of the European war created for the Philippines a "grave commercial situation." Vital trade routes have been imperilled by a shortage of shipping bottoms, he said. The withdrawal of many Dutch, Norwegian and Danish vessels and the sale and transfer of some United States vessels to foreign registries "leaves unprotected those trade lanes across the Pacific to the Philippines, from which it is only a short distance to the Straits Settlements and vital supplies of rubber and tin."

Mr. Pirovano conferred at some length with officials in Washington and suggested that the United States charter ships now owned by the Government to the Philippines at low rates.

Single Air Company in Spain

Transocean

MADRID, May 5—A single state controlled air transport company has been organized in Spain to control all existing lines and any new ones that may be started, it was announced here today. This step was taken upon the suggestion of the Air Ministry.

At present there are two air lines operating in Spain: Lisbon-Madrid-Barcelona, and Madrid-Malaga-Tetuan-Melilla Soon another line extending to the Balearic Islands and the Canaries will be organized, it was stated.

Curtiss-Wright Merger Abandoned

United Press

NEW YORK, May 12—Plans for a merger of the Curtiss-Wright Aeronautical Corporation and the Atlas Corporation, the world's largest investment company, have been abandoned, it was revealed yesterday.

Stockholders' objections were said to have been responsible for the shelving of plans first announced two months ago, which would have had the effect of increasing the aviation company's capital by approximately US$36,000,000.

Britain Will Buy Food From Canada

Transocean

NEW YORK, May 17—Britain endeavors to purchase Canadian agricultural products in order to make up the deficiency suffered by the loss of the Dutch and Danish market, it was stated in a report received from Ottawa.

According to the opinion of Canadian experts the British wishes would necessitate a far-reaching change in the Canadian agricultural program, which change would have no effects before next year and then only on a limited scale.

In the meantime British Government representatives declared their readiness to purchase the entire egg production, although no considerable export surplus can be expected for a long time.

Since the British butter requirements in the past were supplied from New Zealand and Holland it appears very doubtful that Canada, which so far did not export large quantities, would be in the position to deliver the quantities required by Britain.

Jewish Emigrants Said Arrested in Britain

Transocean

STOCKHOLM, May 16—Some 3,000 German and Austrian Jewish emigres living in England and Scotland, who so far have been left at liberty, were suddenly arrested by the British police early this morning, it was repored here from London.

They are being taken to the internment camps, where since the war began, the ordinary German citizens have been detained.

Rumanian Shortwave Station

Transocean

BUCHAREST, May 16—A new Rumanian shortwave station transmitting on the 32.4 meter band started to broadcast last night. The initial address was made by the Rumanian Propaganda Minister Giurescu who expressed satisfaction at the new station not only giving Rumania an opportunity to keep the Continent but also overseas countries informed about the reconstruction work in new Rumania.

Heating By Coal Prohibited

Transocean

ATHENS, May 5—Hot water for baths in apartment houses and flats in Greece will in the future be available only three days per week, it was decreed here today. This measure has been taken to save coal.

Also to save coal, it was decided to abandon central heating for flats.

U.S. WANTS 10,000 PLANES, 16,000 PILOTS

Walsh and Vinson Introduce Measures To Strengthen Navy

Domei Tsushin

WASHINGTON, May 21—Legislation enabling the United States to become the world's No. 1 air power in every category, far surpassing Germany's spectacular air might which is now threatening Great Britain and France with unprecedented destruction, was introduced into Congress tonight as some Congressional circles advocated the sale of all American aircraft to the Allies.

Senator David I. Walsh and Representave Carl Vinson, chairmen respectively of the Senate and House naval committees, after conference with President Roosevelt and high navy men, introduced separate bills in the National Legislature authorizing the Navy to purchase at least 10,000 new warplanes.

TO TRAIN PILOTS

The bill also provides for the training of 16,000 pilots and the establishment and development of new and old air bases at a cost of more than $124,000,000. The new air bases will be constructed reportedly at the folowing places: San Juan, Puerto Rice; Coco Solo, Panama; Seattle; Unalaska and Kodiak Alaska; Pearl Harbor and Kaneche Bay, Hawaii; Midway, Wake, Johnston, Canton islands in the Mid-Pacific; Quinsett Point, Rhode Island; Guantanama Bay, Cuba; Charlette Bay, Virgin Islands; Tongue Point, Oregon; and Corpus Christi, Texas.

The House Military Affair Committee meanwhile approved a bill removing all plane limits for the Army Air Corps, including the present 6,000 limit in view of the world situation.

In a joint statement issued tonight, Senater Walsh and Representative Vinson said the new bill would be financed under the $250,000,000 emergency appropriations, recently requested by President Roosevelt.

Senator Claude Pepper, Florida Democrat, indicating growing American desire to help the Allies before it is too late, introduced a resolution in the Senate authorizing the President to sell all airplanes and aircraft equipment now belonging to the United States Army to the Allies and also to speed up all measures designed to aid the Allies.

The Navy Department rushing feverishly ahead with its gigantic program tonight ordered all Navy yards to work additional shifts and to increase all civilian shipbuilding forces by at least 15,000 men.

SILENT ON SHIPS

WASHINGTON, May 21—Officials of the Navy Department tonight declined to comment on reports that the 2nd Squadron of the Atlantic Fleet is scheduled to arrive in Lisbon shortly. It was said that all news concerning the movements of American naval vessels has been rigidly restricted since the start of the European war.

Nazis Said Using Ultra Speed Bombers

Domei Tsushin

NEW YORK, May 21—Close on the heels of reports that the Germans have perfected a number of highly-destructive new weapons of war, including a secret flame-thrower, the United Press learns from Berlin today that the Nazis are employing an ultra highspeed bomber to blast the way for German columns sweeping across France and Belgium.

The new bomber reportedly is capable of a speed close to 400 miles per hour. It is said, the plane can dive from an altitude of 5,000 feet at a speed of 500 feet per second to release five bombs on its objective when several hundred feet off the ground and swoop out of range before the bombs explode.

The terrific speed with which the attack is executed, it is claimed, does not give the defending anti-aircraft uni's time to establish the plane's range. The new bomber, moreover, is said to eliminate the need of fighters which ordinarily escort bombers on their raids.

Landon Accepts Invitation For Talk with Roosevelt

Domei Tsushin

WASHINGTON, May 21—It was revealed today that President Roosevelt has personally renewed his invitation to Alfred M. Landon, Republican leader, for a conference with the President tomorrow, and that the invitation has been accepted.

Stephen Early, the President's secretary, explained that the earlier cancellation of the engagement was the result of a mixup due to negotiation through intermediaries. He said the President telephoned Mr. Landon in Chicago directly to clear up the confusion.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT" - by Ripley

COVERING THE WORLD

From German Sources

Belgium Normal

STOCKHOLM, May 22—The Berlin correspondent of the Svenska Dagbladet who visited the battle area in Belgium, gives a vivid account of the scenes he witnessed. "Traveling from the German border to Brussels, numerous proofs of destruction can be seen. It is surprising however," writes the correspondent, "that many roads and bridges are fully unharmed. There are many villages showing no evidence of damage. This fact is characteristic of the German blitzkrieg. German officers opine that the new methods employed are considerably less gruesome to the civilians than the old ways of fighting. In many places, Belgian peasants were again attending to their fields."

ARSENAL EXPLOSION

STOCKHOLM, May 22—Another explosion occurred last night in the Woolwich Arsenal situated on the Thames near London. The explosion was immediately followed by the outbreak of fire. Several persons are reported killed. No official information is available as to the number of injured. Reports from London add that several departments of the Woolwich Arsenal had to be closed down.

DETAILS GIVEN

BERLIN, May 22—Competent German quarters today issued further details on the loss of the cruiser Effingham now also admitted by the British Admiralty. "The communique of the German high command on May 17 reported that it had been possible to land straight bomb hits on a battleship and a light cruiser off Narvik. The cruiser was so badly damaged that auxiliary ships of the British fleet tried to tow it to Bodoe. The constant menace by the German airforce prevented, however, successful salvaging maneuvers. The cruiser was therefore set aground on a rock in order to at least save the crew."

GIRAUD CAPTURE EXPLAINED

BERLIN, May 22—Although the capture of the French General Giraud by German troops has not yet been admitted in France, informed quarters in Berlin were in a position to give further details as to how the capture was effected. General Giraud who had been appointed commander-in-chief of the 9th Army was as a result of the impetuous and rapid German advance unable to survey the position of his troops.

Hence he decided to proceed himself to the front in an armored scouting car in order to organize the resistance if possible. Not knowing how far the German troops had meanwhile advanced, the General drove into a German armored column and was taken prisoner.

OPINIONS DIFFER

GENEVA, May 22—The rapid advance of the German troops in Northern France in the direction of the Channel coast has intensified the differences of opinion between London and Paris on the continuation of the operations of the Allied forces, it is reported from Paris.

For this reason, the commander-in-chief of the British Expeditionary Forces, General Viscount Gort who is at present in London, is said not to be returning to the battlefield as the British troops merely have the task to cover the embarcation and return to Britain. General Weygand similar to his predecessor, Gamelin, was to have the command also over the British Expeditionary Forces which, however, no longer appears to be the case after the latest military events.

From British Sources

REYNAUD EXHORTS PEOPLE

PARIS, May 22—In a statement broadcast today, Premier Paul Reynaud said, "I have just seen General Weygand, who is back from the front. He told me. 'I am full of confidence if all do their duty with fierce energy. If we hold out for a month I am convinced that we shall be three-quarters of the way to victory.'

"The civilian population must not allow itself to be scared by German mechanized columns. The people must remain at their posts and continue their work. Any cessation of production will mean the weakening of national effort.

"Once again I say, if we hold out for a month we shall be three-quarters on the way to victory."

A military spokesman revealed this morning that Arras was recaptured last night and is now in the hands of the Allies. No details are yet available.

Small German mechanized detachments are still pressing forward in the direction of the coast. In Lorraine the enemy have bombarded three towns behind the Allied front and we have retaliated by bombing three towns behind the enemy front.

Fighting in Norway

STOCKHOLM, May 22—Allied and Norwegian forces between Narvik and Trondhjem have taken up new stations and made strategical moves, in the course of which they have not lost a single man, it is reported here. The German losses have been heavy especially among the Alpine troops from the Tyrol.

R.A.F. ACTIVE

LONDON, May 22—The Air Ministry announcement issued tonight describes extensive and intense activity on the part of the Royal Air Force during Tuesday, Tuesday night and Wednesday. The enemy's advance was harassed and his lines of communications attacked and military objectives in Rhinish Prussia were bombed, at a total cost of five bombers and eight fighters.

The announcement reads: "Working in relays throughout yesterday strong forces of Royal Air Force bombers harassed the spearhead of the German armored columns in their movement toward the Channel ports. Troop concentrations, tanks, supply columns and mechanised units were bombed and machine-gunned. Roads and railways were attacked with high explosives. Considerable damage was inflicted on the enemy wherever he was located. During last night's large scale raids, bombing attacks were made on the enemy's main lines of communications through Namur, Dinant and Aachen areas. Many bridges were blown up or rendered useless and severe damage was done to marshalling yards and rail transports."

RAISING TROOPS

CANBERRA, May 22—Prime Minister Menzies announced in Parliament today that Australia was raising the third division of troops immediately for service abroad.

The appointment of Essington Lewis as Director General of Munitions Supply with the supreme authority to reorganise the Government's undertakings and the use of private factories was also announced.

Mr. Menzies further stated that the Government have decided upon the extension of the personnel of the Navy and the construction of a large graving dock, costing £3,000,000, for accommodating capital ships.

Most of the increase in the personnel of the Australian Navy will be used to man 10 submarine vessels which Australia is to build for the British Navy.

CASUALTIES LIGHT

LONDON, May 22—It is learned here tonight that the British front in north France has been held everywhere today and that casualties have not been heavy.

The British have counterattacked between Arras and Douai, but the results are not yet known.

The Belgians launched counterattacks against German troops who had crossed the Scheldt in two places and both counterattacks were successful.

MORALE UNIMPAIRED

PARIS, May 22—General Weygand, back here from a tour of inspection of the war zone in Belgium and northern France, expressed his satisfaction tonight with the morale and material equipment of the troops whose fighting spirit he found unimpaired by the hard struggle of the past two weeks.

Military circles in close touch with the Commander-in-Chief emphasised that the situation was still grave but pointed out that the main bodies of the German troops had not consolidated any gains made by their motorised columns. The apex of the German wedge is formed by motor cycle detachments equipped with automatic arms, which are incapable of occupying and holding terrain. Even the lightest of French forces have been able to push them back. Nevertheless they are extremely mobile and elusive like the cavalry of other days.

Goering Decorated

ROME, May 22—The King of Italy conferred on Field-Marshal Hermann Goering the Annunciatia order which is the highest Italian decoration. According to tradition, the bearers of this order have the honorary title of "Cousin of the King." The Italian King and the Duce on this occasion sent extremely cordially worded felicitations to Field-Marshal Goering.

BRITISH TOLD TO LEAVE

GENEVA, May 22—The British consul-general in Paris has requested all British subjects who have no urgent professional reasons to leave the French capital.

ANKARA STAND

ISTANBUL, May 22—A semi-official communique issued in Ankara today states that the policy of neutrality pursued by Turkey precludes the acceptance by Marshal Chakmak of the post of commander-in-chief of the Allied army in the Near East in succession to General Weygand. This statement puts an end to reports circulated in Allied circles on the subject in connection with Marshal Chakmak's tour of inspection in Syria.

BUSINESSMEN URGED ACTION ON E. INDIES

Say Government Must Take Steps in View of British Moves in Southeast

Since it would be impossible for the Dutch East Indies to adopt any policy in defiance of British wishes, the Japanese Government, despite the assurances given by the Netherlands as to the status quo of the Dutch East Indies, must act promptly to safeguard Japan's interests in the Southeastern Pacific, it is held in business circles here.

Tokyo carefully has been watching developments of the Dutch East Indies issue and the Japanese public, as one man has been giving full support to the Government in strengthening the internal solidarity. In economic circles, the following view is being expressed on the matter.

NEUTRALITY DIFFICULT

(1) The expansion and intensification of World War II has caused the belligerents to disregard the neutrality of other Powers and it has become increasingly difficult to maintain a hands-off policy. In order to conserve war materials, the belligerents are prohibiting or severely restricting the exports of important materials from their colonies as well as home, while such neutrals as the United States are increasing their armaments at a feverish pace. The Soviet Union actively is endeavoring to import materials from Central Europe and the Near East. Such neutrals are as anxious as belligerents to increase armament, lay in huge stocks of materials and to augment their national strengths. Italy is now a nation on a wartime system, using all available materials for munition purposes. The importance of trade relations with the Dutch East Indies and the United States to Japan is obvious in such circumstances and it is only natural that the Government and the Navy should be resolved to protect Japan's trade rights in the Dutch East Indies.

PROMPT ACTION NECESSARY

(2) The high-pressure arming of the Soviet Union and the United States, considered in conjunction with the fact that the European war is believed likely to end sooner than expected, must persuade the Government that some prompt action is necessary to cope with the possible situation arising after the war. The vital question in this connection is a speedy completion of the East Asia economic confederacy comprising Japan, Manchoukuo, China and the Southeastern Pacific.

(3) At present, the Dutch East Indies is professing a policy of maintaining the status quo but since the Netherlands itself is now under the protection of Britain, it is not likely that the Dutch East Indies can adopt any foreign policy contrary to the policy of the Anglo-French combination. The Dutch East Indies is bound to give priority to Britain and France in the supply of tin, oil, guttapercha and other vital munition materials. Labor power, skill and development materials will also be short in the Dutch East Indies in consequence of supplying the munition materials to the Allies. This must entail a visible decrease in the absolute quantity of production of the materials, so that it would not be possible for the Dutch East Indies to maintain the present volume of trade with Japan or other countries for that matter.

BRITISHERS ACTIVE

(4) Moreover, British activities in the Dutch East Indies have of late taken on a positive tinge. Instances are:

(a) Britishers reportedly are entering the Dutch East Indies from Singapore at the rate of 50 persons a day, all of whom are regarded as officers and men of the British Far Eastern Army in mufti and under secret orders to defend the Dutch East Indies against invasion.

(b) The British Far Eastern air force has been strengthened. Two flying companies which were to have been stationed in Punjab, India, and one in the Near East have been added to the Far Eastern air force in view of the Dutch East Indies issue. There are already in Singapore five flying companies of scouting and fighting planes and 13 companies of bombers and fighters, not to speak of two companies of training planes. The aircraft-carrier Eagle is at anchor at the naval station.

In these circumstances, the British are likely to grow increasingly positive in actions in the Dutch East Indies until it will no longer be possible for Japan to stand by. Prompt action, therefore, on the part of the Government is being urged in business circles.

SAVINGS CAMPAIGN WEEK PLANNED

Suggestions Include Moves Against Gay Roisterers

In order to complete national savings of ¥12,000,000,000, the week beginning June 21 was assigned as "a saving campaign week," at a meeting of the directors' board of the National Spiritual Mobilization Wednesday afternoon at the Premier's official residence.

Although concrete measures for the work are to be discussed at the next meeting, the compulsory savings, vocation savings, bonus by bonds, and activity of the Savings Federation were decided to be fully utilized for the national savings.

The completion of the objective of the Asia Development Day, the first day of every month, was also one of the subjects of the meeting.

In view of the fact that the recent tendency for inflation is apt to make the people act against the objective of the Day, regulations for special trains for hot springs on the first day of each month, extraordinary inspection at gay quarters, and contributing some of the interests earned on the day and other counter measures were asked at the meeting.

They agreed that practical measures for those subjects will be decided at the earliest possible moment in future meetings of the group.

JINGOISTS STILL ACTIVE, SAYS PROCURATOR

Warns Against Seditious Literature and Thoughts In Detectives' Meeting

"Though the jingo-spirited partriotic movement, rampant for a time, seems somewhat abated as result of the recent turns in the international situation, it is not yet altogether gone. Those placed to watch these movements should be keenly aware of the fact."

So admonished Public Procurator-General Michiyo Iwamura Wednesday afternoon to the prefectural detective-section chiefs gathered at the Justice Minister's official residence, for their first conference day.

The conference began at noon Wednesday, with the Public Procurator-General's opening address. Then delegates attended a luncheon given by the Justice Minister, at which Justice Minister Shotatsu Kimura spoke briefly.

On leaving the Justice Minister's residence at 2 p.m. the detective-section chiefs moved to the assembly hall of the Home Ministry to confer on book censoring and policing foreign residents.

The Public Procurator-General's address, was as follows:

"Superficially, the leftists' movement in our country seems entirely gone. However, indications are present to show that there is an negligible number of those who harbor communistic ideas. They are secretly looking forward to the arrival of their time, which, according to them, is when the country suffers a severe rupture in the national thought as the result of our long-drawn war against Chiang Kai-shek's regime in China. All prefectural detective sections should be on constant guard so they have no chance to start their sinister movement.

WAIT CHANCES

"The chauvinists' movements which had been mostly directed on stressing the international anti-Comintern movements or the quick disposal of the Chiang Kai-shek power, once seemed even resorting to illegal drastic methods to attain their aims. Though much abatement is seen in the tension of their campaigns, there still exist, among varied patriots' organizations, some elements who are waiting for their chance of starting on radical ways.

"It is to be much regretted that we are again having much seditious literature in circulation, most of which is loaded with fabricated stories of our domestic administration, foreign policies, economy and military forces. The tendency should be taken up seriously by those engaged in detective affairs, because the literature will do much, if left untouched, toward loosening the solidarity of the nation. The literature should be suppressed at all costs."

The Public Procurator-General is reported, in this connection, to have repeated the same address at the gendarmerie chiefs' conference held at 4 p.m. Wednesday at the Justice Minister's official residence, which was also addressed by the Justice Minister.

PRICE FIXING OF STEEL UNDER CONSIDERATION

Council Will Discuss Situation on May 29; 3 Solutions Proposed

Measures for much-debated steel price will be discussed and determined at a conference of the Price Policy Council to be held May 29, at the Premier's official residence.

Raise in price of goods made of iron and steel is eagerly demanded by manufacturers who have found it impossible to conduct their business at profit at the current low price due to abnormal rise abroad in prices of pig iron, scrap iron and steel, high freight rates and rise in wages and production cost here.

Under the circumstances, the Commerce and Industry Ministry is now forced to raise the officially-fixed prices of goods made of steel and iron to such an extent that manufacturers can conduct their business at profit or minimize the raise in prices through rationalization of management of zusiness of the manufacturer.

In the meantime, the Metal Section of the Price Fixing Commission under the Commerce and Industry Ministry have now three measures for the solution of the problem:

1. Manufacturers shall be allowed to raise prices of their goods by 20 or 30 per cent per ton, but they shall be prohibited from paying high dividends.

2. Adoption of pooled accounting system on the basis of the Army's method of controlling profits to rationalize production process whereby to minimize the raise of prices.

3. Prices shall be pegged to the present level, in return for which the Government shall indemnify losses which the manufacturer may suffer due to the pegging of prices.

Views will also be exchanged at the forthcoming conference concerning the enforcement of ration card system over goods other than matches and sugar, which are to be placed under the system beginning June 1 in the seven largest cities, Tokyo, Yokohama, Nagoya, Kyoto, Osaka, Kobe and Fukuoka.

VALUABLE ANCIENT JAPANESE SWORD DISCOVERED AT NEW YORK AUCTION

A renowned sword, executed by Masamune, Japan's most well known swordsmith who lived in the Kamakura period in the 12th century, which had been lost for 36 years was bought by a Japanese at a New York auction in September, 1938. It will be soon brought to Tokyo, according to the Asahi.

The sword is said to have been the cause of the vendetta of Araki Matayemon in the 17th century, which is known by even school children. It was handed down as an heirloom in the house of the late Prince Yodo Yamauchi, a former Daimyo, until about 50 years ago when Prince Yamauchi gave it to Kanichi Araki, his former retainer.

It was sent to America in 1908. It changed hands several times after it was auctioned by the Japan Exporters Association in New York in the same year.

Ko Onuma, director of the Tokyo Commercial Museum at New York, discovered and bought accidentally at an auction in the city. It is still in its original shape, in a black lacquer-box and with a scroll of writing in which the late Prince Yamauchi wrote the circumstances under which the sword was given to Mr. Araki. The sword has a blade of two feet and four inches. It will be carried by Mr. Onuma personally back to Japan in the near future.
